This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

PREFACE.

A GOOD many years ago I began filling up fragments of time by working out a complete list of my predecessors in the Librarianship of Trinity College, and adding any biographical details concerning them which came in my way. As time went on, the details grew considerably, and ultimately took form in a book, which the Cambridge Antiquarian Society is kind enough to think worth publishing. It is doubtless true that a majority of the Librarians spoken of in the following pages were little known beyond the bounds of their own College and University; still, carefully worked-out details of the past, however trifling, often have an importance indirectly to historical workers, and I am hopeful that some of the points established here may be not without their value.

Moreover, the special character of the Librarianship gives it, I think, an additional interest. It is, to the best of my belief, the only College Librarianship in either University, which forms an integral part of the foundation of its College; and further, the curious provision in the will of the founder, by which the Archbishop of Canterbury was empowered in certain cases to interpose, has more than once led to a curious history[1].

[1] Of course the College would necessarily require some official to take charge of the Library before the Stanhope foundation; but the Library-keeper of those earlier days was evidently merely a College servant, whose position relatively to others is amusingly shown by a Conclusion of 25 Feb. 160¼, which rules concerning payments made at graduation to "the two chief Butlers and Tonsor, the Janitor, Chapel-Clerk, and Library-Keeper."

Looking back upon so long a line of predecessors, I have ventured upon the egotism of including the present Librarian. Remembering that now, save for one short break of a few weeks, I have been a member of the foundation of my College for nearly forty years, I could not but wish to link myself on to those who had been Librarians before me.

It was suggested to me that I should begin my book with a memoir of Sir Edward Stanhope. That I have not done so, is due to no lack of respect and gratitude to my "pious founder," but simply to the fact that I have not discovered anything more about him than is contained in the short life given in Cooper's Athenæ Cantabrigienses[1], with its accompanying references. It is mainly thence that I draw the following brief epitome of facts.

Edward Stanhope was the fourth, or fourth surviving son of Sir Michael Stanhope, Governor of Kingston-upon-Hull (who was beheaded, 26 Feb. 155½, as an accomplice of his brother-in-law, the Lord-Protector Somerset), by his wife Anne, daughter of Nich. Rawson, Esq., of Aveley in Essex. She died 20 Feb. 158⅞. He was educated at Trinity College, and was admitted Scholar in 1560 (the College records do not give the date more minutely), Minor Fellow 23 Sept. 1564, and Major Fellow 30 April, 1566. It may be noted that he discharged the following College offices. He was Lector Græcæ Grammaticæ in 1567, Sublector quartus in 1568, Lector Linguæ Græcæ in 1570 and Thesaurarius Tertius in 1571–2. He took the degrees of B.A. 156⅔, M.A. 1566, LL.D. 1575. He supplicated for incorporation as M.A. at Oxford, 6 Sept. 1566[2], on the occasion of Elizabeth's visit, and as LL.D. on 1 Sept. 1578[3].

He was Prebendary of Botevant in York Minster from 25 Nov. 1572 until 9 Aug. 1591[4]. Among those who had held this Prebend before him were John Colet, Dean of St Paul's, and Cuthbert Tunstall, Bishop of Durham. On 5 June, 1577, he was sworn a Master in Chancery; and not later than 1578, he was appointed Chancellor of the Diocese of London. He became Vicar-General of the province of Canterbury in 1583, was Member of Parliament for Marlborough in 1586, and became Rector of Terrington in 1589. On 31 May, 1591, he was collated to the Prebend of Kentish-Town (or Cantlers) in St Paul's Cathedral[1], and, at a date subsequent to 8 Dec. 1594, he became Chancellor of that Cathedral[2], in succession to the famous Dr John Dee, who had been one of the original fellows of Trinity College. He was knighted 23 July, 1603; and died 16 March, 160⅞. He was buried in St Paul's Cathedral, and an inscription drawn up by William Camden was set up to commemorate him on the eastern wall near the great north door[3].

An extract of so much of his will as concerned his foundation at Trinity College is contained in the manuscript volume of "Wills and Charters" in the possession of Trinity College. There is also a transcript in the Baker MSS. in the British Museum[4], and a copy therefrom in the University Library[5].

Curiously enough, Sir Edward Stanhope had an elder brother, also a Sir Edward Stanhope, and the latter was one of the executors to the will of the former[6].

I must confess that the combination of lay and clerical functions in the same man and at such a date, struck me as curious—at once a rector and prebendary, and also a knight and M.P. It might indeed be said that the case is one of a lay Rector, but even so the Prebend remains. I was almost tempted to think that two Edward Stanhopes might have been "conflated" into one record, but the only other I can trace is the brother of the founder of the Librarianship, to whom I have already referred. Unfortunately, he, like his brother, was also knight and M.P.

[6] This duplication of names must often have caused confusion, and Mr Foster (Alumni Oxon. sub nom.) must be in error in speaking of Dr George Stanhope as a son of the Sir Edward Stanhope we are now considering, who seems never to have married, and who devised his estate of Wellwood to the five sons successively of his brother, Sir Edward, George being the third.

At this stage I consulted my friend, the Rev. Dr W. Sparrow Simpson, sub-dean and librarian of St Paul's, on the chance that perhaps something in the statutes of St Paul's in force at the end of the sixteenth century might throw some light on the matter. Dr Simpson, however, tells me that there was nothing exceptional in the case of St Paul's. If indeed we are dealing here with a case of survival from pre-Reformation laxity, one can only wonder that such a survival should have been tolerated under the strong-handed rule of Elizabeth and of Whitgift.

It certainly is hard to conceive that Sir Edward Stanhope was in Holy Orders. His epitaph describes him as "in publicis Ecclesiæ et Reipublicæ negotiis versatissimus," which would hardly have been said of a cleric even of an earlier generation, without some notice of his being in Holy Orders.

Of pre-Reformation laxity there is abundance. Dr Simpson refers to the case of Colet, who was admitted to a rectory when he was only nineteen years old, when therefore he could not possibly have been in priest's orders[1]. This was in 1485, however, and there should be considerable difference between that date and 1591.

Dr Simpson kindly mentioned the matter to the Rev. George Hennessy, who is engaged in a most important work, a new edition of that part of Newcourt's Repertorium which refers to the beneficed clergy. Mr Hennessy states that he has met with numerous instances of laymen holding Prebendal stalls in St Paul's and elsewhere. These instances, however, are of pre-Reformation date[2].

[1] See Dr Lupton's Life of Colet, p. 116.

[2] For example, he mentions the case of Sir Ri. la Vache, who petitions the Pope for a Canonry of London, with expectation of a Prebend, for his son Edward, aged 13. This was granted by the Pope, 4 July, 1361. Or again, take

Mr Hennessy is inclined to think that Sir Edward Stanhope must have been in Holy Orders, though he has no proof to offer. It may be said on the one hand that the character of the rule in Church and State at the time lends support to this view; on the other hand, the wording of the epitaph and the absence of any allusion therein to the clerical office must be thought adverse evidence. I am afraid therefore that the matter must be left in abeyance.

A striking post-Reformation parallel is suggested by Dr Simpson in the person of the well-known Sir Thomas Smith, the first Regius Professor of Civil Law in this University, and Principal Secretary of State to Edward VI. and Elizabeth. Yet he was also Rector of Leverington in the Isle of Ely from 1545 to 1549; and in 1547 he was appointed Dean of Carlisle. He was deprived of the Deanery by Mary, but was restored in 1559, and retained it till his death in 1577. Certainly, however, no one would for a moment suppose from his epitaph[1] that he was in Holy Orders. Strype remarks, in connection with the appointment to the Deanery, "being at least in Deacon's Orders[2]," but he cites no evidence on the point.

It may be remembered that, at the present day, the Queen holds the first Cursal Prebend of St David's; and Dr Simpson mentions that many monarchs have been Honorary Canons in Germany.

The numerous friends, from whom I have received help in various points of detail, are all, I trust, mentioned in due

Thomas Bubbewith, who was appointed Prebendary of Wenlakesbarn in 1406, but was only ordained acolyte and sub-deacon, 17 May, 1410.

The most astonishing case mentioned by Mr Hennessy is that of James de Ispania, nephew of Queen Eleanor, who, though not ordained, was in 1306 Canon of London; who, besides several Rectories, held Canonries and Prebends in Wells, London, Dublin, Lichfield, Exeter, Sarum, York, Lincoln and elsewhere. He obtained a dispensation from Pope Boniface VIII. to hold two Rectories, the Deanery of Pontefract Castle and of St Leonard's, York, and other Canonries and Prebends, not being ordained priest. James de Ispania was absolutely a layman, not even in any of the minor Orders.

course. To two successive Registraries of the University, the late Rev. Dr Luard, and Mr J. W. Clark, my especial thanks are due. The latter has allowed me to inflict upon him questions on a multiplicity of details, in a way which many men would call ἀναίδεια, and has helped me to clear up many doubtful points. Since the manuscript of my work was transcribed for the press, the Archbishop of Canterbury and the Bishop of St David's, to both of whom my thanks were due (pp. 7, 35), have passed away.

In conclusion, I wish to remark that in a work of this kind, where a large number of small details are drawn together from a variety of sources, I am keenly alive to the paramount need of accuracy and the difficulty of securing it; though I believe I have taken all possible pains. In the Preface to my Catalogue of the Incunabula in the College Library, published in 1876, I referred to the difficulty of securing accuracy in bibliographical work, which is full of like perils. Certainly a further experience of twenty-one years has taught me how hard it is, spite of all pains, to avoid error.

SIR EDWARD STANHOPE'S FOUNDATION.

(I.) William Hickes. [1609–161½.]

Sir Edward Stanhope died 16 March, 160⅞, and his will, which was dated 28 February, 160⅞, was proved 25 March, 1608. In this he bequeathed £700 to Trinity College, to buy lands for the maintenance of a Library-Keeper and Under-Library-Keeper, and most minute directions are therein given as to the conditions of election and the tenure of office. Among other things he ruled that the Library-Keeper was to be chosen "within one Fortnight of the receipte of the foresaid £700 or within one Fortnight after my Funerall, if the Librarie[1] be finished before my death: and that my Executors be tyed to the paiment of the first yeares annuitie of £30." Yet there seems to have been some little delay.

The first person appointed on this Foundation was William Hickes (or Hicks). I can find no record of his election in the Conclusion Book, nor of his admission as Librarian in any of the Admission Books; yet he must have been appointed about Lady-Day, 160⅞, for in the Senior Bursar's book for the year ending Michaelmas, 1609, Mr Hickes receives two quarters' stipend.

[1] This is of course the old Library in the north-west angle of the Old Court. The range of which it forms part must have been finished between 1599 and 1601 (Willis-Clark, Architectural History of the University of Cambridge, vol. ii. p. 481).

Although no Christian name is given, it was certainly William Hickes (B.A., 160$\frac{5}{6}$; M.A., 1609), since there had been no other of the name at Trinity, since Henry Hicks (B.A., 15$\frac{68}{70}$), who would not only have been too old, but had never proceeded to M.A. William Hickes was admitted scholar 12 April, 1605, at the same election with Giles Fletcher.

I think it is possible that it was this William Hickes who was collated Prebendary of Bedford Magna in Lincoln Cathedral, 20 Aug., 1612[1] (installed 23 Aug.); and whether there be any connection between the two events or no, it will be noticed that the vacancy in the Librarianship and the appointment to the Lincoln Prebend both took place in 1612. In any case, the Lincoln Prebendary must either have been our Librarian, or the Oxford man of the same name mentioned below. There is only one person from each University who satisfies the conditions. I had hoped that the Lincoln Chapter Records might mention the University, but my friend Chancellor Leeke tells me that the only note to the name of the new prebendary is "artium magister." If he were not the Librarian, he must have been an Oxford man (B.A. 158$\frac{1}{2}$, from Brasenose: M.A. 1584, from Magdalen: Chaplain of Magdalen, 1585–9)[2], whose age perhaps makes him more likely.

A person of the name was Vicar of Edmonton in 1589.

Prebendary William Hickes, be he which he may of the two, was on 7 Dec. 1625 inducted as Rector of Stoke-Hammond in Buckinghamshire[3], a living once held by good Bishop Hacket. I thought it possible that the doubt as to the University might have been cleared up by a memorial tablet in the church, but the present Rector of Stoke-Hammond, the Rev. E. Pain, informs me that there is none, nor is there any record of his burial. He sends me, however, a note of the marriage of the Rector's daughter, where the date may perhaps be thought to be somewhat in favour of our fixing upon the older man[1].

There was another William Hickes of Trinity (B.A. 164½, M.A. 1645), who might be the son of the Librarian. A William Hickes, born at Oundle, 13 April, 1647, eldest son of "William Hickes, M.A." (not improbably the preceding) was admitted at Merchant Taylors' School in 1657–8[2].

One of the name was Rector of Tortworth, Gloucestershire, in 1644[3].

(II.) Nicholas Parker. [161½–1625.]

On 19 Feb. 161½, the entry occurs in the Conclusion Book, "This 19th of February, the Library Keeper's place was granted to Ds Parker." Again no Christian name is given, but the only member of the College named Parker, then a B.A., was Nicholas Parker[4]. He took the degrees of B.A. 160⅞, and M.A. 1612. He was admitted scholar 22 April, 1608; and on 22 Sept. 1610, Sir Parker and Sir Baker were chosen "conducts potentia," that is, were elected not to fill up actual vacancies among the chaplains, but vacancies which might subsequently arise. On 23 Dec. 1614, Mr Parker was granted by the Master and Seniors, a Paling (or Palin) Exhibition of £4, which he held as long as he was Librarian.

The system of pre-election was often applied to the Chaplains; we now find it in the case of the Librarianship, for on 9 March, 161⅝, we read in the Conclusion Book, "concluded that Sr Stoakes[5] shall be Library Keeper upon the next vacancy of the place." However, no vacancy occurred for nearly ten years, and then, if I read the circumstances aright, it is connected with a very curious line of procedure on the part of the College.

[4] Before him was Samuel Parker, M.A. 1596, whose degree cuts him out, and after him is none till John Parker, B.A. 1628.

[5] This must be David Stokes, admitted Scholar, 5 April, 1611, B.A. 161⅞, afterwards Fellow of Peterhouse, M.A. 1618, D.D. 1630, incorporated at Oxford, 1645. See Welch, Alumni West. p. 80; Foster, Alumni Oxon. sub nom.

Three meetings of the Seniority took place in September, 1625. At the first of these (Sept. 3), Mr Parker has letters of Attorney to compound the matters between the College and the sequestrators of Aysgarth. At the second (Sept. 16), Will. Short was sent in Mr Parker's place, "being lately dead on his journey into Yorkshire," for dispatch of the same business of Aysgarth. At the third (Sept. 19), the Palin Exhibition which "Mr Parker the Librarian" had held was filled up, and a new Librarian was also chosen. Now while one cannot see on what principle the College should choose its Librarian to arrange College business in Yorkshire, still having regard to the sequence of events in the three September Seniorities, and to the fact that there was no other member of the Foundation of the College at that time named Parker, we can hardly doubt that, be the explanation what it may, it was Mr Parker the Librarian who was so sent. He may himself have been personally connected with Aysgarth, but we have no evidence of this.

(III.) Peter Hersent. [1625–1631.]

As we have already said, the new Librarian was elected on 19 September, 1625. The entry in the Conclusion Book runs as follows, "At the same meeting Mr Hairsant was chosen into the Library Keeper's place, which Mr Parker before him held; submitting himselfe to those lawes and orders which are mentioned in Sir Edward Stanhope's will and such others as the Master and 8 Seniors from time to time should agree upon and think fitt to make for the ordering of the Library and better use of the Books therein."

We now have got a person of a less shadowy personality than his two predecessors. Peter Hersent had been educated at Westminster, was elected thence to Cambridge in 1616[1], and was admitted, with one other, Scholar of Trinity, on 2 May, 1617.

[1] Welch, Alumni West. p. 85.

He took his B.A. in 162$\frac{2}{1}$, and his M.A. in 1624. He appears to have been a somewhat turbulent person, in the light of the statement signed by him among the Admonitions at the end of a book of Admission of Fellows, etc.:—"Februarij 22, 1621. Wheras I haue verie vnadvisedly and rashly strucken one Mr. Halfhead, Manciple of o^{r} Colledg, to the shedding of blood [endaundgering of his eye[1]], I doe acknowledg myself to haue receiued an admonition for that fault tending to expulsion. Peter Hersent." It will be seen that at this time Peter Hersent was a Bachelor Scholar of the College, and with him was implicated one Thomas Shirley, who makes the same apology. The latter culprit was somewhat the older. He[2] had taken the degrees of B.A. 161$\frac{5}{6}$ and M.A. 1619, and was elected Minor Fellow in 1618. We thus actually have a regent Master and Fellow of the College behaving in this outrageous way.

Hersent's election to the Librarianship on Sept. 19 was followed by his admission on Sept. 24. The entry in the Admission Book, rather fuller than the ordinary curt form, runs, "Ego Petrus Hersent admissus fui et juratus custos Bibliothecæ a Dno. Edvardo Stanhop fundatæ in præsentia magistri et octo seniorum."

At the election to the Chancellorship of the University, 1 June, 1626, "Pet. Harsnet" voted for the Duke of Buckingham[3].

Mr Hersent was incorporated at Oxford, 5 June, 1628[4]. There was another Peter Hersent at Oxford (Queen's College, B.A. 1705), who may have been the grandson of the foregoing[5].

[1] The words in italics are crossed out in the original, and the words in brackets are written above them.

[2] It was Mr Shirley who succeeded to Mr Parker's Palin Exhibition. He hanged himself in April, 1637. The story is told in the Baker MSS. D, § 9, 21 (Cat. of MSS. in Lib. of Univ. of Camb. v. 565). Baker had extracted the story of the suicide from a letter of the Rev. G. Garrard to Lord Strafford, written 28 April, 1637 (Strafford Letters, ii. 72). Mr Garrard speaks of Shirley as a Bachelor of Divinity, but there is no trace of this degree to be found in the Registry.

(IV.) WILLIAM CLUTTERBOOKE[1]. [1631–1641.]

The new Librarian, like his predecessor, was from Westminster, whence he was elected to Cambridge in 1623[2], and was admitted scholar of Trinity, 9 April, 1624[3]. He took the degrees of B.A. 162$\frac{7}{8}$, M.A. 1631, B.D. 1640. He was elected Librarian 21 April, 1631, and admitted on April 27. The Conclusion Book does not directly record his election, nor do I find his admission in the Admission Book, but perhaps the following entry in the Conclusion Book may be meant to cover the latter:—"April 27, 1631. It was agreed that Mr Clutterbooke, who was chosen Librarie Keeper in Mr Hersent's place the 21st of Aprill, should be admitted this day; and so he was." We catch a stray glimpse of him once again a few months after his election. In the Conclusion of Jan. 26, 163$\frac{1}{2}$, we read, "granted at the same time to...Mr Clotterbooke to be in extra commons with allowance of...6^{s} 8^{d}." This would, I suppose, presumably point to an illness.

He was one of the writers of complimentary verses, prefixed to Duport's Liber Job Graeco carmine redditus (Cantab. 1637); and has three sets of verses in the Carmen Natalitium (Cantab. 1635), two sets in the Συνῳδία (Cantab. 1637), and two sets in the Voces Votivae (Cantab. 1640). In the first three of these books he gives his name as Clotterbook, in the last he signs himself, Guliel. Clutterbooke, S.T.B. Coll. Trin.

[1] Also Clotterbook, Clotterbooke. The spelling at the head of the section is that in which his appointment to the Librarianship is recorded.

[2] Alumni West. p. 93. A John Clutterbuck, possibly the brother of the present, was elected to Oxford from Westminster in 1616 (ibid. p. 85).

[3] Another of the scholars at this admission was Thomas Randolph, the well-known poet.

A curious incident has to be recorded in connection with the year 1638. According to Sir Edward Stanhope's will, if the Librarianship became vacant in any way, or if the Librarian had in any way forfeited his office, the Master and Seniors must fill up the vacant post within fourteen days or the presentation was to lapse to the Archbishop of Canterbury. A certain Samuel Turbervile[1], a young graduate of the College, apparently on the look-out for promotion for himself, maintained in 1638 that from various causes Mr Clutterbuck had forfeited his post, and ultimately Archbishop Laud, accepting this view, claimed the next presentation.

Of the correspondence which ensued, Mr Aldis Wright could find, when Senior Bursar, no trace in the Muniment Room of Trinity College; but I have found draughts of two letters in the Lambeth Library, one from Laud to the College, and the other the answer of the College. Of each of these there are three several draughts, inserted amid the correspondence between Archbishop Wake and Bentley on the occasion of a similar dispute in 1728 [Lamb. 1156]. So far as I am aware, neither of these documents has ever been printed, and I accordingly reproduce them here by the permission of the Archbishop of Canterbury.

One of the draughts [no. 4] is in the opinion of my friend, Mr Kershaw, the Lambeth Librarian, in Laud's own handwriting. It contains both letters, that of Laud to the College, and the answer, on the same sheet of paper, as though it were desired to keep the correspondence together for convenience of reference. The second draught [no. 4 bis] contains a certain amount of additional matter in the answer of the College, and it is this form of the answer therefore which I have subjoined, noting one or two minor differences, other than those of mere spelling. The third draught of the letter of the College is a transcript in Bentley's writing [no. 43[1]]. The original, however, from which he transcribed it, can, as I have said, no longer be found in the College Muniment Room.

[1] Samuel Turbervile took the degrees of B.A. 163$\frac{3}{4}$, and M.A. 1637. He was the author of verses in Ducis Eboracensis Fasciae (Cantab. 1633), and in Συνῳδία, Sive Musarum Cantabrigiensium Concentus et Congratulatio (Cantab. 1637). He is perhaps the same Turbervile who was appointed chorister of the College, 28 March, 1632. He had not been a scholar of the College, and therefore his appointment to the Librarianship would have been in defiance of Sir Edw. Stanhope's will.

After my hearty commendations etc. I am informed that the orders set down and appointed by Sir Edw: Stanhope, Kn^{t} & D^{r} of Laws (a worthy Benefactor to y^{r} House) for the Practice & Reglement of yor Library-Keeper, have not been observed by him; where upon your[3] Disposing of that place is devolved to me, as by the last Will and Testament of the s^{d} Kn^{t} deceased you may plainly[4] perceyve. These are therefore to pray & require you to give me a present accompt of this business, & if the Information here mentioned be true, I shall expect that you fail not likewise to send me the names of some discreet & able young men of your Colledge, whom you conceive fittest for such an Employment, that thereupon I may make Choice of some one of them, & see him presently settled accordingly. So having nothing else to trouble you with[5] at this time, I leave you to God's blessed Protection & Rest.

May it please yor Grace;

Having received yor Grace's Letter concerning our Library-Keeper's

[1] This transcript is referred to in a letter of Bentley to Archbishop Wake, 15 Dec. 1728, "The rough Draught of the College's Answer to Archbishop Laud, which could not be found when Dr Thomas Bentley drew up his Argument, has yesterday been found in a Box of our Registry; and I thought it my duty to copy it out and send it to your Grace the first opportunity..." (Correspondence of R. Bentley, D.D., p. 693).

[2] This follows Laud's draught. I note the variations of what I have called the "second draught," other than varieties of spelling.

[4] Add "and fully."

[5] Omit.

[6] Here for the reason given above, I have followed the wording of what I have called the "second draught," noting the variations in the copy in Laud's writing. For a subsequent use of the fact of this double recension, see Bentley Correspondence, p. 696.

Office being devolved to yor Grace's Election; we according to the Tenor of yor Grace's Letter requiring of us to be Inform'd of the true Estate of that Matter, return you our opinion and judgment, as we concieved before your Grace's Letter having had the same Inducement: most humbly submitting the same to yor Grace's better Interpretation.

May it please yor Grace

There came to us one Mr Turberville, sometime a Member of our Society, who accused to us the Library Keeper of Loss of his place, & was likewise Petitioner to be Elected thereto.

His Articles ag^st: Him were four:

1. That he had accepted the Office of Poser in the University, contrary to a clause in the Benefactor's Will, forbidding him on Loss of Place, ipso facto, to accept of any office.

2. That he had read a certain Lecture in the College Hall for a Friend (& who had another for his Deputy) contrary to some Words in the same clause.

3. For not Keeping his Exits & Redits, by which the time of his Continuance, strictly limited, might appear.

4. For that he had procured a Dispensation from the King's Majesty to take the Degree of Batchelor in Divinity, which Degree by the Will is prohibited to him.

May it please yor Grace,

Having met together more than once for the discussing of these Articles; and using the best Advice of our Lawyers which this Term tyme were left at home, we conceived, humbly submitting to y^r Gr: Judgment,

That the Poser's Place is no Office—being a work but of two Days, but an Assistance[1] only to the Proctors, as app^rs: by the words of the University Statute & Proctor's Book P.... and by a Register'd Grace in the University so calling it. Else also the Proctors to whom they are Assistant would be said also to take an office.

For reading for his Friend in the Hall we likewise with Submission conceived that it being not for himself, but as Deputy, was no breach of the same clause voiding his place, inasmuch as we see both by our Statutes, and by daily pract^ce: that such persons [who are not capable of some offices in their own Persons are appointed & may execute the same offices[2]] for another in that place.

[2] A note is appended in the "second draught" in a line with the text, on the blank space at the right hand of the column:—"These words are so defaced in

For the not keeping his Exits & Redits by wch his Continuance & Discontinuance must be known, we see not that any penalty is expressed in the Will, but conceive it is left to the Master & Seniors censuring[1], of which there is mention in the same Will, pag...., neither did it appear to us that he had been absent above his Days allow'd, for want of his Exits & Redits, for which we gave him a Censure, & he alleged his absence was in time of publick Calamity, which is excepted in the Will itself.

And last of all, for procuring a Dispensation to take a Degree contrary to the Will, we know not that Sr Edw: Stanhope's Will can hinder the King's prerogative in his own Foundation. Besides that, the said Dispensation was never used.

[One thing more we humbly crave Pardon to speak not in our own regard, but for the Right of the College in succession. It is conceived by our Council that tho' this place shou'd by any default be forfieted ipso facto, yet a declaratory sentence is required before absolute Voydance, as we see it practised in like Cases, & as it may seem touched P.... of the Will. And that that Declaratory Sentence of Voydance belongeth to the Master & Seniors upon Notice—and by consequence there is no Devolution unless a Choice be not made or agreed upon in 14 days after such voidance[2].]

Your Grace's offer is most Favourable, and we desire not to decline yor: Grace's Election, but humbly submit ourselves to yor Grace's judgment and better Interpretation. And if your Grace be not therewithal satisfied we shall be ready to admit of such a person as yor Grace shall commend to us."

What the further course of this controversy was, I am quite the Original, wch is torn & but a rough Draught that they are here supply'd by conjecture." The bracket and its contents are not in Laud's draught, but a space is left.

[1] "concerning of which."

[2] In the "second draught" a note is appended in the blank space on the left:—"These words between these [ ] are cross'd out & probably, on deliberation of the M^r and Sen^rs were omitted." In Laud's draught, the upper part of the second half of the sheet, where the words in brackets would have come, has been cut off. In Bentley's draught the brackets are not found, and the concluding paragraph of the letter, "your Grace's offer...," is omitted. In his letter to the Archbishop of 31 Dec. 1728 (Bentley Corresp. p. 697) Bentley declares that, in the Draught from which he copied it, this last paragraph was crossed out, as evidently not consonant with the views of the Seniority when the letter was sent. Clearly there is a Bentleian and an anti-Bentleian recension, so to speak, and one can hardly doubt that there must have been unfair dealing on the part of one side or other. In the absence, however, of all trace of the original, it seems impossible to arrive at the truth. Yet Bentley's letter above referred to declares that the cancelling of which he speaks has been seen by the Master and Seniors.

unable to say. Whether the Archbishop was convinced by the arguments of the Master and Seniors, or whether the influence which had got Clutterbuck his dispensation stood him in further good stead, or whether the increasing civil troubles gave Laud weightier matters to think of,—at any rate in spite of the humble surrender by the College, Clutterbuck remained Librarian for more than three years after the date of the Archbishop's letter given above, and took the degree of B.D. for which he had obtained the Dispensation[1].

This document is thus indexed in the College Register—"King's letter allowing William Clotterbooke, Master of Arts and Library Keeper, to take his Degree of Bachelor of Divinity." It is thus endorsed, "By virtue of his Matie's letters above written and now red before the Master and Seniors they gave leave to Mr Clutterbooke to take his degree of Bachelor of Divinitie without p'iudice to his place. 19 September, 1638."

Clutterbuck signed the declaration in the Registrary's book, required before taking the degree of B.D., on 10 (or 11[2]) June, 1640, so that the degree was presumably taken on St Barnabas's Day. One of the preliminaries for this degree, until recent years, was the preaching of a Latin Sermon before the University (Concio ad Clerum). It is this which is referred to in the curiously worded Conclusion of 10 Jan. 1639 (i.e. 16$\frac{38}{40}$);—"This day leave was given to Mr Clutterbooke to Clerum, by the Master and 8 Seniors."

[1] An apparent allusion to this affair occurs in a short letter of Laud to Trinity College, a transcript of which is given in the Letter Book of Dr Henry Smyth (Master of Magdalene, 1626–42, and Vice-Chancellor, 1635–36). It is dated 10 Dec. 1638, and superscribed in a different hand, "To Trin. Coll. about the Library Keeper's place." It runs, "I doe desire you to be very carefull of the observance of those thinges which are given you by the will or other ordinance of any benefactors; for if that be not done it will disharten other well minded men to doe that for Colledges wch they would otherwise have beene easilie induced to doe. So wishing all prosperouse successe to your selfe and that whole Society, I leave you to God's blessed protection and rest. Your lovinge friend, W. Cant." (Patrick MSS. vol. xxiii. § 1: see Cat. of MSS. in the Library of the Univ. of Camb. vol. v. p. 173.) This, however, throws no further light on the history of the affair.

[2] The writing appears doubtful.

I cannot doubt that it was this William Clutterbuck who became Rector of Wodeham Ferrers (Essex) in 1641, and of Danbury (Essex) in 1662. Both of these livings were in the gift of Sir Humphrey Mildmay and both were vacated by Clutterbuck's death in 1665. I learn through the kindness of the Rev. Charles P. Plumptre, Rector of Wodeham (or Woodham) Ferrers, and the Rev. John B. Plumptre, Rector of Danbury, that there is no memorial of any kind, tablet, window, or the like, of Clutterbuck, in either church.

There was a Laurence Clutterbuck at Trinity, B.A. 166$\frac{8}{9}$, who might be the son of the foregoing.

(V.) Thomas Griffith. [1641–167$\frac{3}{4}$.]

In the case of this Librarian I have met with a difficulty, which I have utterly failed to solve, in spite of much help from two successive Registraries, Dr Luard and Mr J. W. Clark, who most kindly took the utmost pains in the matter, but to no purpose.

The former gave me a note of the M.A. degree of Thomas Griffith in 1639, adding that he ought to be a B.A. of 163$\frac{5}{6}$, but that of this degree there was no trace. Feeling bound to offer a theory, I suggested (1) that there was some lacuna in the B.A. list, or (2) that Griffith was incorporated from Oxford, or (3) that he was granted the M.A. degree by Royal Mandate. It turned out, however, that there was no lacuna in the MS., and the absence of the note Oxoniensis or per Litteras Regias seemed to be conclusive against the other ideas. I felt therefore forced to give the matter up as an unsolved puzzle, and accounted for the irregularity by the troublous condition of England at the time.

A year or two ago, when working through some volumes of Cole's MSS. in the British Museum, I came upon a list of the Westminster Scholars elected to Trinity. Under the year 1632 occurred the entry "Thomas Mutton als Griffith[1]." Assuming for the present this alias to be correct, we have everything dovetailing together perfectly.

Thomas Mutton was educated at Westminster, was elected to Cambridge in 1632[2], was admitted Westminster scholar of Trinity, 3 May, 1633, and took his B.A. degree in 163⅝, no M.A. being recorded, corresponding to the absence of a B.A. for Griffith. Doubtless Cole had due warrant for the alias, but where he got his information from I cannot in the least say.

Dr Rutherford, the Head Master of Westminster School, kindly informs me that there is nothing in the records under his care which casts the least light upon it, while the books of Trinity College and of the University Registry seem alike to offer us two disjointed halves, not making a whole.

It then occurred to me that, assuming with Cole that the two names belonged to one person, it was possible that he shifted from the use of one name to the other between his B.A. and M.A. degrees, and thus in the list of the scholars given from year to year in the Senior Bursar's book as receiving payment the change would be visible. Unfortunately, while in the Senior Bursar's book for the year ending Michaelmas, 1637, the name of Ds Mutton occurs in its place, so that the evidence, if anywhere, is to be looked for in the two succeeding volumes, we are suddenly pulled up by finding that the volumes for these two years are wanting and that the series goes on again with the volume for the year ending with Michaelmas, 1640. I must therefore leave the matter for the present unsolved, merely repeating that Cole must obviously have had some evidence, though unfortunately I am quite unable to get at it. I should add that Mr J. W. Clark most kindly had tracings made for me of the signatures of Thomas Mutton at his B.A. degree in 1636, and of Thomas Griffith at his M.A. in 1639, and I cannot honestly say that they bear any particular resemblance to one another.

Thomas Griffith became Librarian in 1641. There is no reference to his election in the Conclusion Book, but his admission is recorded on Dec. 15 of that year:—"Thomas Griffith iuratus et admissus in officium Bibliothecarium (sic) hujus Collegij." Just as his earlier history forms an awkward puzzle, so in a few years after his appointment we are faced with a second puzzle of a different kind. In a Conclusion of 15 October, 1645, it is ruled, "Agreed then by the Master and present Seniority that Mr Archer[1] be required to deliver up the key of the Library for Sir Davies[2] and that he shall have the wages for the present, which is due quarterly to the Library Keeper."

What had become of Griffith and how Mr Archer came to be holding the key of the Library, I am quite unable to say. Possibly, amid the civil troubles of the time, Griffith may have left Cambridge, as the Conclusion of 19 June, 1646, suggests, and the king's letter in his behalf in 1666 would show on which of the two sides Griffith would range himself. If the key were delivered to Sir Davies, it will be seen that he did not hold it long. A Conclusion of 19 June, 1646, runs, "Then agreed by the Master and Seniors that Mr Griffith be wholly removed from the Library Keeper's place, for his long neglect thereof, etc.,"

[1] Mr Archer was doubtless the Thomas Archer who was entered a member of Trinity College, 9 July, 1635; B.A. 16$\frac{4}{5}$; M.A. 1643. The only other Archer of Trinity at all about this time was Anthony Archer, admitted Jan. 29, 163$\frac{4}{5}$, but he does not seem to have taken a degree.

[2] It does not seem possible to identify this Davies with certainty. There was no scholar of the College of that name at the time, but on 27 October, 1645, "Sir Davies, Oxoniensis" was admitted under Mr Bradshaw; and by an order of Parliament, 23 Feb. 164$\frac{4}{5}$, Sir Davies and seven others are admitted into eight vacant Fellowships. On 2 March, 164$\frac{4}{5}$, Sir Davies has the Civil Law Fellowship given to him. On 7 March, 164$\frac{4}{5}$, the College sanctioned the Grace for M.A. for Sir Davies [John Davies]. The University Register shows that on 22 April, 1646, John Davies is admitted to the same degree here as at Oxford (I presume as a necessary preliminary before proceeding to M.A.). Mr Davies, presumably the same person, was made Hebrew Lecturer at Trinity, 21 Sept. 1648, and became a Senior in 1649. It is not clear what is the Oxford record of Sir Davies. The person who seems to fit in best is the John Davies admitted at Queen's 10 Sept. 1636, B.A. (from Balliol) 25 June, 1640; the only other possible one being one who took his B.A. from New College, 18 Dec. 1634. I learn through the kindness of the Rev. T. V. Bayne, Keeper of the Archives, that there is no note in the Oxford Register as to whether either of these men migrated to Cambridge.

and in one of 2 July following we read, "Then agreed that Sir Holloway[1] should be elected into ye Library Keeper's place, who was afterwards upon the taking of his oath, admitted."

The Conclusion of 19 June was subsequently erased, and, in that of 2 July, the name of Sir Holloway was crossed out. As a matter of fact, things must soon have righted themselves, for, while Holloway receives the Librarian's stipend in 1646, yet thenceforward Griffith receives it till his death.

Besides being Librarian, Griffith, like John Laughton and Clagett after him, was a "Tutor" of the College[2]; the earliest instance of a pupil entered under him which I have noticed being of 10 March, 164$\frac{5}{6}$, and the latest 11 March, 165$\frac{3}{4}$.

After the stormy commencement, Griffith appears thenceforward in tranquil guise, and in so critical a year as 1649, we find (11 May) a Conclusion, "Then also given to Mr Griffith, Library Keeper, tenne pounds," no reason being stated. We find a passing allusion to extra work done in the Library in aid of the Librarian and Under-Librarian, the latter of whom would at that time vacate his office on taking his B.A. degree:—March 21, 164$\frac{9}{50}$, "It is concluded that five pounds be given to Sir Pockley[3] as a gratuity, he having done something which is usefull in the Library."

[1] Thomas Holloway was B.A. in 164$\frac{4}{5}$, M.A. 1649. He was made Lady Elwis's Exhibitioner, 28 Jan. 164$\frac{4}{7}$. On 5 Nov. 1647, he was one of three appointed chaplains, though he does not appear in the Senior Bursar's book as such till 1649.

[2] It is true that this might be "Mr Griffiths the fellowe" [so named in a Conclusion of 4 Dec. 1646], but I do not think that this is likely. The Fellow in question must have been George Griffith, socius minor in 1645, as there is no other one of the name at all near this time. But George Griffith never holds any of the offices discharged by all resident fellows, and so passes out of sight. Nor does the University Register furnish any help. All that we find there is as follows: a George Griffith from Oxford takes his M.A. in 1645 (there is no B.A. to correspond) and a Griffith (christian name not stated) took his B.A. and LL.B. in 164$\frac{4}{5}$ from Queens' and his M.A. in 1647. He died 6 Jan. 168$\frac{4}{7}$, ætat. 64.

[3] Thomas Pockley (Eboracensis) was entered as sub-sizar under Mr Rolls, 12 March, 164$\frac{8}{9}$; admitted scholar, 13 April, 1649; fellow, 29 Sept. 1650. He has leave given to travel "with college seal, and have traveller's expenses, when Mr Rich's time is up, if no one senior to him claims it," 19 Jan. 165$\frac{3}{4}$. On the following 24 March, the patent is sealed, and three years' leave given.

The next entry (3 Sept. 1657) refers, I should presume, to the grant by Sir Edward Stanhope, but if so, I am quite unaware what should have called for such a transcription at this time. The Conclusion of the above date runs:—"Ordered that the Senior Bursar pay twentie nobles to Mr Griffith for writing and examining a copie of the founder's Originall grant, and a marke to Mr Nealand for examining and binding it; provided that they doe together with the Register (sic) exactly examine it over againe."

In 1659, Mrs Elizabeth Peyton, widow, left legacies to her friends Mr Thomas Griffith and three others, all of Trinity College[1].

From time to time Griffith's name occurs in the Conclusion Book in connection with statements of dividend; and, on 11 Dec. 1662, the Senior Bursar is directed to pay Mr Griffith the sum of £8. 4*s*. 4½*d*., the reason not stated.

However, on the next occasion of a special gift to him, there was a very definite reason. In the winter of 166⅝ (I am unaware of the exact date), the Library roof was destroyed by a fire, which also probably damaged the walls[2], a fact which was doubtless not without influence in aiding the project for building a new and larger Library, which however was not taken in hand till the time of the succeeding Master, Dr Barrow. The nearest approximation I can give to the date of the fire is that furnished by a Conclusion of 12 Jan. 166⅝, recognizing the special care which had devolved on the Librarian:—

"Agreed then by the Master and Seniors that ten pounds be given and payd by the Bursar to Mr Griffith for his charges and paines extraordinary in the Library upon the firing of it and since."

We spoke above of political feeling possibly having some influence on Griffith's career. Sir Edward Stanhope had been very emphatic in ruling that his Librarian should in no case hold any other post—"office, lecture, preferment, or preachershipp... but the verie firste acceptaunce of anie of these Functions shall presently disable him from continuing the place of Library Keeper." Yet, in spite of this, we have at a Seniority on 22 Oct. 1666 the Conclusion, "Agreed then that Mr Thomas Griffith be chosen Register (sic) in the place of Mr Rhodes." The irregularity is explained by a subsequent Conclusion of Nov. 8:

"Ordered then by the Master and Seniors that his maiesties Letters in behalf of Mr Griffith be entered and accepted, and that Mr Griffith be continued in both places of Library Keeper and Register (sic) accordingly." This, I suppose, favours the idea that Griffith's political views may have had some bearing on the incidents referred to under 1645 and 1646.

Griffith held both posts to his death, nearly eight years later. Alderman Newton, who succeeded him as Registrar, records in his Diary, "Mr Thomas Griffith of Trinity Colledge in Cambridge dyed on Saturday morning at London the 21st March 1673 [i.e. 167$\frac{3}{4}$] about 3 of the clock[1]."

NOTE.

Since the above section was written, I have learnt some facts, through the kindness of the Rev. Thomas Williams, Rector of Aston Clinton, Buckinghamshire, which may possibly explain the curious alias I have referred to in connection with Thomas Griffith.

From him I learn that Eleanor Williams, daughter of — Williams of Conway, married as her first husband Evan Griffiths of Pengwern, and bore him three sons, Robert, John and Thomas. Evan Griffiths died in 1616, and his widow subsequently married Sir Peter Mytton (or Mutton)[2], Chief Justice of North Wales, and bore him two daughters. Sir Peter died in 1637.

Mr Williams considers that there is reason for supposing that Evan Griffiths died young and that his three boys would thus be under the tutelage of their step-father.

[1] Diary, p. 71: in publications of Cambridge Antiquarian Society.

[2] See Foster's Alumni Oxon. sub nom. It will be remembered that the name Mytton, according to Welsh pronunciation, would be identical with the English word Mutton.

Is it not then conceivable that they may in a loose sort of way have borne their step-father's surname? If then we assume that the Thomas Mutton who took his B.A. in 163$\frac{5}{6}$ is the same with the Thomas Griffith who took his M.A. in 1639, and the same also with the Thomas Griffiths of the above note, the difficulty is explained.

The date of Evan Griffiths' death, taken in conjunction with the date of Thomas Griffith's B.A. in 163$\frac{5}{6}$, shews that Thomas must have been a baby or a very young child at his father's death. On his mother changing her name by re-marriage, the three young boys may have been currently styled by the new name, and by this name, we may suppose, Thomas passes through his school life at Westminster and his early years at Cambridge. Indeed he does not assume his true paternal name until after his step-father's death.

Whether this suggestion be well-founded or not, it seems to me to be at any rate far from improbable.

(VI.) James Manfeild. [167$\frac{3}{4}$—1679.]

Thomas Griffith had died on March 21, and on March 24 his successor James Manfeild[1] was appointed. The new Librarian had been educated at St Paul's School, coming thence as an exhibitioner to Trinity[2]. Here he was entered as a sizar, 20 February, 166$\frac{3}{4}$, under Mr Pulleyn, Isaac Newton's tutor, was chosen into an unnamed Exhibition on 22 October, 1666, and was admitted Scholar, 17 April, 1668, on the same day with John Laughton, who succeeded him as Librarian.

He took the degrees of B.A. in 166$\frac{8}{9}$, and of M.A. in 1672, and it will thus be seen either that he degraded a year, or that he did not commence residence at the proper time.

He was elected Librarian on 24 March, 167$\frac{3}{4}$, and was admitted the same day. Two years later, 23 Feb. 167$\frac{5}{6}$, the work began of digging the foundations for the present Library[1]. Mr Manfeild was a subscriber of £20 to the fund for the erection and fitting up of the Library. He only held the office of Librarian till 1679, when (May 3) he was appointed Chaplain in the place of Mr Scattergood, and Mr Laughton succeeded him as Librarian.

[1] The name is found both as Manfeild and Manfield. The former is that in which he signs his name on his admission as Librarian, and it is that given in the School Register.

From 1684 to 1686, Mr Manfeild was University Librarian. I owe to Professor Mayor a statement of the voting at his election,

Manfeild, James, M.A.—116,
Broughton, Thomas, M.A., Jesus College—78,
Shorting, M., M.A., Jesus College—?

He appears as Chaplain in the Senior Bursar's books till 1686, in which he receives one quarter's stipend: he must therefore have ceased to be Chaplain at the end of 1685, or the beginning of 1686. How the Chaplaincy and University Librarianship were vacated, whether by death or otherwise, I am quite unaware.

In the Threni Cantabrigienses (Cantab., 1669) are verses by Jas. Mansfield (Trin.); and in the Musarum Cantabrigiensium Threnodia (Cantab., 1670), by Jas. Manfield (Trin.).

(VII.) John Laughton. [1679—168⅔.]

In the person of John Laughton, we come to one who was well known amid the literary men of his day, as we shall seek to show. For some of the details as to his family and birthplace, I am indebted to the kindness of my friend, the Rev. L. Borissow, Precentor of Trinity College, who has received them from Miss E. J. Laughton, of the Hollies, Tickhill, Yorkshire, the descendant of John Laughton's elder brother William. John Laughton was the younger son of John Laughton, gentleman, of Eastfield, Tickhill, and was baptized there 17 Jan., 1649[2].

[1] Conclusion of 22 February: Willis-Clark, ii. 537.

[2] It is suggested in the notes put in my hands, that, though in some family papers it is stated that John Laughton "dyed a batchelor," he may more probably be identified with the Rev. John Laughton, rector of Goadby-Marwood, Leicestershire, who married Dorothy, sixth daughter of Anthony Tate, Esq., of Burleigh Park. The College statutes, however, would prevent

He was entered, as pensioner, at Trinity College, under Mr Bainbrig, 1 May, 1665; and admitted Scholar 17 April, 1668. He took his degrees in due course, B.A. in 166$\frac{8}{9}$, and M.A. in 1672. He was appointed Chaplain in 1678 and Librarian in 1679. I find no trace in the Conclusion-Book of his election to the Librarianship, but he was admitted 13 May, 1679. After a short time, however, he vacated his new office and went back to his old one, for on 17 Feb. 168$\frac{3}{4}$, we find the Seniority appointing Mr Thomas Rotheram Librarian, and Mr Laughton Chaplain in the place of the said Mr Rotheram. On 22 Jan. 1686, Laughton was elected University Librarian[1], and held that post and his College Chaplaincy till his death in 1712. He also held prebends both of Lichfield and Worcester. He was collated to the former, 28 July[2], 1696, and to the latter, 22 May[3], 1700.

Laughton was an intimate friend of Sir Isaac Newton. This is shewn, for example, by two letters to Conduitt, Newton's nephew, from Humphrey Newton, who was Sir Isaac's amanuensis at Trinity, 1683—9. In one of these, dated 17 Jan. 172$\frac{7}{8}$, he mentions that Sir Isaac rarely went visiting, and had but few visitors. Of these but three are named, of whom Laughton is one[4].

In a subsequent letter, 14 Feb. 172$\frac{7}{8}$, he remarks: "Mr Laughton, who was then Library Keeper of Trin. Coll., resorted much to [Sir Isaac's] chambers: if he commenced Dr afterwards, I know not[5]."

Laughton from marrying, whether as Librarian or Chaplain. William Laughton died in 1702, aged 60, and is buried in Tickhill Church, where there is a monument to him. For a very full genealogy of the Laughton family, reference may be made to Hunter's South Yorkshire, vol. i. p. 246.

[5] Ibid. p. 96. Laughton did not proceed beyond the degree of M.A.

He was also on intimate terms with Newton's friend, Charles Montague, afterwards the first Earl of Halifax, who in a letter announcing to Newton his appointment as Master of the Mint (19 March, 169⅝) says, "Pray give my humble services to John Lawton (sic). I am sorry I have not been able to assist him hitherto, but I hope he will be provided for ere long, and tell him that the session is near ending, and I expect to have his company when I am able to enjoy it[1]."

Laughton was a man of great literary activity, and his name is frequently met with in the notices of scholars of his time. He was eminent as a book-collector, and his collection, or, at any rate, the choicer portion of it, was bequeathed to the College Library[2].

Of Laughton's own literary work we may notice, first, that he often appears as a writer in the University tributes of congratulation or condolence. He was the author of verses in Hymenaeus Cantabrigiensis (Cantab. 1683), Maestissimae ac Laetissimae Academiae Cantabrigiensis Affectus (Cantab. 168⅝), Illustrissimi Principis Ducis Cornubiae...Genethliacon (Cantab. 1688), Musae Cantabrigienses (Cantab. 1689), Lacrymae Cantabrigienses in Obitum Serenissimae Reginae Mariae (Cantab. 169⅝).

Besides these lighter effusions, he produced something more solid as the editor of the beautifully printed quarto edition of Virgil (1701; several times reprinted in octavo, 1702, 1707, 1711). According to Hearne, he wrote the "very long" Preface to the Cambridge edition (1687) of Vincentius Lirinensis[3]. He supplied the list of the MSS. in Trinity College Library to the Catal. Librorum MSS. Angl. et Hib. (1697). He corrected for Tho. Smith a transcript of Camden's Annals of James[4]. He helped Will. Piers in his edition of the Medea and Phœnissæ of Euripides, and Piers gratefully speaks of "humanissimus bibliothecæ publ. præfectus...amice et benevole, ut semper solet."

There seems a general consensus among writers as to the kindness and courtesy of Laughton as well as to his learning. Grabe tells us how Laughton ("vir erga exteros supra modum humanus") shewed him the Cambridge MS. of the Testaments of the xii. Patriarchs[1], and would have allowed him to copy it had he so wished[2].

Professor Mayor, to a note of whose[3] I owe most of the above instances, also cites Moses du Soul (Solanus) as speaking, in a note on Lucian[4], of an emendation, "quam [restitutionem] ante annos viginti a me repertam, non meis tantum libris adscripseram, sed in codice viri doctiss. Joh. Laughton, bibliothecæ Cantabrigiensis præfecti, amicitiæ causa."

The Strype correspondence in the University Library shews how much aid Strype received from Laughton. In a letter of Laughton's to Will. Gouge (7 Dec. 1689) Laughton tells of his search in Trinity Hall Library and elsewhere for a MS. life of Abp Parker[5], and refers to materials for the Elizabethan bishops generally. In 1697—8, he sends materials for Strype's life of Sir Thomas Smith[6].

In like manner, the references to Laughton in the Diaries of Burman and of Uffenbach on their visits to Cambridge, are couched in highly complimentary language. Burman reached Cambridge, 17 July, 1702, and, on the following day, "the very learned public Librarian, Laughton, escorted" him to see St John's College, and its Library. On the following day, Laughton shewed him Trinity Library and afterwards his own

"very curious library and coins. He is...a man of great erudition; he has very lately edited Virgil[1]."

Uffenbach's visit took place in the Long Vacation of 1710, at a time when Laughton was unfortunately absent. This was a great disappointment to Uffenbach, for he complains, with reference to his visit to the University Library (1 Aug.), that of the MSS. "we could see nothing well, because the librarian, Dr[2] Laughton (or as they pronounce it, Laffton) was absent; which vexed me not a little, as Dr Ferrari highly extolled his great learning and courtesy. Rara avis in his terris[3]." Again, under date 13 August, he laments not having seen various learned and famous men, who were absent from Cambridge during the summer:—"Among them it is only fair to name first Dr Laughton, the bibliothecarium of the university. For if he had been in residence, we should (thanks to his singular courtesy, which was very highly commended to us[4]) not only have examined the public library more thoroughly and better, but also his own collections in manuscriptis and nummis[5]."

Besides his duties as Librarian, Laughton was a member of the first body of Curators of the Press ever appointed (Grace of 21 Jan. 169⅞). After the mention of the Vice-Chancellor, the Heads and Professors, comes, "Mr Laughton Coll. Trin. Academiæ Architypographus." I do not understand the exact force of the title[6].

Laughton's political opinions are sufficiently shewn by the fact that he was appointed to preach the sermon at St Mary's

[1] Mayor, op. cit. pp. 116, 117. Both Burman and Uffenbach very naturally speak of Laughton as Dr. This, however, is an error; he never proceeded beyond M.A.

[4] In curious contrast to this is the letter (3 Aug. 1708) from Librarian Hudson to Hearne:—"...Call'd upon John Laughton. He did not so much as invite me either to eat or drink with him; wch he might have done wth out being in danger of my accepting his offerr: neither could he be prevail'd with to take a single copy of Livy. before the University on 14 Feb. 168$\frac{8}{9}$, which was kept as a day of thanksgiving for deliverance from Popery and arbitrary power[1]. A brother Librarian, of a very different tone of thought, honest Tom Hearne, evidently held him, on political grounds, in high aversion. Thus in his Diary for 8 Oct. 1705, Hearne remarks, "Mr Laughton (John) Keeper of ye Publick Library in Cambridge I am inform'd is a rank whig, a great Talker, and very violent in his Aspersions of the true Ch. of England Men[2]." It is perhaps worth noting that Laughton was a subscriber for Hearne's Leland[3].

Laughton's death is noted by Rud in his Diary, edited by Dr Luard for the Cambridge Antiquarian Society. Under the date 4 Sept. 1712, we read[4], "Mr Laughton dyed about 6 this morning, at his niece Jenkins's house at Woodlayes near Rotheram." Hearne too thus records it under 18 Sept., "Mr John Laughton, Keeper of the Publick Library in Cambridge, died lately. He was a learned man, and understood Books well, and left behind him a good collection, not only of Books, but old coyns etc.[5]" Hearne again refers to Laughton's books in a letter to Mrs Barnes, 29 Oct. 1712, "I have not yet heard how Mr Laughton's books have went. But I do not doubt but they have been sold at great Prices, his collection (so far as I can gather) being extraordinary[6]."

Laughton's literary papers were bought at his death by George Paul. In a letter of 21 Aug. 1713 to Strype, then preparing his life of Whitgift, he remarks, "I have bought the late Mr Laughton's MSS. and papers of all kinds, and am pretty confident that there are many things amongst 'em wch might be useful to you in your design'd Life of Abp Whitgift[7]."

These are referred to in a letter of Thomas Baker to Strype[1], 15 Aug. 1713. Shortly after this, Mr Paul died, as we learn from a subsequent letter of Baker to Strype[2]. Baker had bought the whole collection of Laughton's papers, yet does not seem sure of his legal title. He asks Strype, if he have any of his papers, to retain them till his title is clear.

The following is the inscription on a memorial tablet on the wall of Tickhill Church, "Jane Farmary Widow and Relict of Robert Farmary, Gent., gave a Plate to the Parish Church of Tickhill, for the perpetual use of the communicants there, in memory of her late dear brother, Rev. John Laughton, B.D.[3] of Trinity College, Cambridge, Keeper of the University Library, who departed this life, Sept. 4, 1712. Son of John Laughton, of Eastfield, Gent.[4]"

Laughton's arms were, quarterly, per fess indented, or and gules[5].

One regrets that this eminent Scholar has not found a place, surely amid many men of lesser note, in the Dictionary of National Biography.

(VIII.) Thomas Rotherham. [168⅔—169⅚.]

Thomas Rotherham or Rotheram (for both spellings occur even in his epitaph), was the son of Christopher Rotherham, "armiger," and Barbara his wife, and grandson of Sir John Rotheram, knight, of Someresse (Someries), in the parish of Luton, Bedfordshire.

It would thus seem clear that Thomas Rotherham was descended from John Rotherham, brother of Thomas Rotherham, Archbishop of York (1480—1500), to whom Cambridge owes so much; for the estate of Someries, which had belonged to the Wenlock family, was, on the death of Lord Wenlock, who was killed at the battle of Tewkesbury in 1472, forfeited to the Crown, and was by the Archbishop procured from Edward IV. for his brother[1]. There the family of Rotherham abode for two centuries, till it passed by marriage into the hands of the Crawley family. Mr Guest, whose work I have cited, gives[2] a pedigree of the Rotherham family from the father of the Archbishop, but I cannot find the name of Christopher Rotherham occurring therein.

Christopher Rotherham had settled in London as a mercer; and after his death, his son was sent to St Paul's School, where he was an exhibitioner, 1652—1662, and received a grant of £5 on election to the Exhibition[3].

He was entered pensioner at Trinity College, under Mr Duport, 24 March, 165⅞, "Londinensis, e Schola Paulina," the school not being often noted in the Admission-Book at this early date.

He was not a scholar of the College[4]. He took the degrees of B.A. in 165⅞, and M.A. in 1660. On 9 April, 1661, he was elected to a supernumerary Chaplaincy. The Conclusion of that day runs that it was agreed that Mr Thomas Rotherham "be chosen conduct of this Colledge to come into the next place that shal be voide for him." A vacancy evidently occurred soon, for in the Senior Bursar's book for the year ending Michaelmas, 1661, Mr Rotherham receives one quarter's stipend, the other three quarters going to Mr Yates, whom he replaced. He retained the office of Chaplain for more than twenty years, and then vacated it in favour of Mr Laughton, himself becoming Librarian. He was elected Librarian 17 Feb. 168⅞, and admitted 8 March. The Conclusion Book under the former date records, "Ordered then by the Master and Seniors that Mr Thomas Rotherham be and is chosen Library-Keeper, and that Mr John Laughton be chosen conduct in the place of the said

Mr Rotheram. Jo. North, Mr. Coll." A record of the fact also occurs in the general Admission Book (sub ann. 1682), which is of so unusual a type in that book, being indeed the only one of the kind I have noted, that I transcribe it at length:—"Thomas Rotherham, Artium Mag. fil. Christophori Rotherham Armig., fil. Johannis Rotheram Equit. Aur. de Someresse in com. Bedford, a Magist. et Sen. Coll. SS. et Individ. Trinitatis a Sacellano electus Bibliothecarius ejusd. Coll. Feb. 15, 1682, et admissus Mar. 8."

On 6 April, 1665, a Thomas Rotheram, who must be the above, was incorporated as M.A. at Oxford, from Trinity College, Cambridge[1]. Mr Foster (l. c.) adds, "perhaps Rector of Pett, Sussex in 1695." As Librarian, Rotherham would have been incapable of holding a living, which was expressly forbidden by Sir Edward Stanhope's will, under pain of forfeiture; but he became Chaplain again by exchange with Mr Banks in January, 169⅝, when such a plurality would have been possible. A subsequent Librarian, Samuel Doody, held a Chaplaincy and College living together in the last years of his life.

In the last year of Mr Rotherham's Librarianship, the books were moved into the present Library, and in the Junior Bursar's accounts for the year ending Michaelmas, 1695, we find the sum of £3. 6*s.* 0*d.* paid to the Porters for transferring them[2]. In the following year, when Mr Rotherham had become Chaplain, we have a Conclusion of 24 July, 1696, "Agreed then by the Master and Seniors that ten pounds be given to Mr Rotheram for his trouble in removing the Books out of the old Library into the new." Mr Rotherham had been a subscriber of £20 to the fund for the erection and fitting up of the Library.

Mr Rotherham died 8 Nov. 1702, in the sixty-sixth year of his age, and was buried in the ante-Chapel, on the east of the entrance. On the tomb-stone are Rotherham's arms:—Vert, three bucks trippant, or. Crest, a buck's head erased. Below this, is the following epitaph, "Thomas filius Christophori Rotherham Armigeri filij Johannis Rotheram equitis de Someries

James Banks (Bankes, Bancks) was entered as pensioner of the College under Mr Boteler, 10 Sept. 1678. He did not become a scholar[1]. He took the degrees of B.A. in 168⅜ and of M.A. in 1686. He was chosen "supernumerary conduct," 18 Dec. 1689, appearing as actual Chaplain in the Senior Bursar's book for the year ending Michaelmas, 1690, for which year he divides the stipend with Mr Devereux. He vacated the Chaplaincy and became Librarian, 14 Jan. 169⅝. A Conclusion of that day runs, "Agreed also by the Vice-Master and Seniors that Mr Thomas Rotheram be conduct in the place of Mr James Banks, and that the said Mr Banks be our Library keeper in the place of Mr Rotheram, they both consenting to this exchange. William Linnet, Vice-Master." Yet though this exchange took place in Jan. 169⅝, still in the Senior Bursar's book for the year ending Michaelmas, 1696, Rotheram receives the full payment as Librarian, and Banks in the following year.

On 3 July, 1700, a James le Bancks was incorporated M.A. at Oxford from Trinity College, Cambridge[2], who must be the one now before us, as there was no other James Banks of Trinity at that time.

On 19 Nov. 1706, James Banks, M.A., was instituted Rector of Lilley, Herts. (then in the diocese of Lincoln), on the presentation of Launcelot Docwra, Esq., of Putteridge, on the death of John Stone[3]. This living he resigned, and was succeeded by Thomas Cheyne, 13 Nov. 1709. Of course the acceptance of the living involved the cession of the Librarianship.

On 5 March, 1712, James Bancks was instituted Rector of Bury, Lancashire, on the presentation of "Thomas Bancks, by virtue of a donative from William, Earl of Derby, dated 12 June, 1676." Mr Banks held this living till his death, his successor, John Stanley, being instituted 19 July, 1743[1]. My friend and former pupil, the Rev. B. O. F. Heywood, M.A., of Trinity College, now Curate of Bury, informs me that he knows of no memorial of any kind of Mr Banks in Bury Church.

Mr Banks's shield is on the wall of the College Chapel, the easternmost on the South side. The arms are, Sable, a cross or, between four fleurs de lys argent. The tinctures must be considered doubtful. My friend the Rev. A. H. F. Boughey points out that with the same coat there are variations in tincture of the charges in different branches of the Banks family, and it is not possible to say with certainty to which of these the shield in the Chapel is to be referred.

(X.) Nicholas Clagett. [1706—1716.]

The spelling of the name of this Librarian varies between Clagett, Claget, Claggett and Clegat. The spelling of the surname here adopted is that in which he writes it when sworn in as Librarian. For the Christian name, I have taken the ordinary spelling, but Clagett in his will spells it Nicolas.

His father and grandfather both bore the same name as himself. His grandfather was in 1636 Vicar of Melbourne, Derbyshire[2], and died as preacher of St Mary's, Bury St Edmund's, 12 Sept. 1663. His son, Nicholas Clagett the second, was also preacher at St Mary's, Rector of Hitcham, Suffolk, Rector of Thurlow Parva, Norfolk, and Archdeacon of Sudbury. He died 27 Jan. 172⅔, at the age of 73. Archdeacon Clagett's brother, Dr Will. Clagett, was preacher at Gray's Inn, and died 28 March, 1688.

[1] Baines's Lancashire, ii. 517, ed. Harland.

[2] Foster, Alumni Oxon. sub nom.

Nicholas Clagett the third was educated at Bury St Edmund's School under Mr Leeds, and was entered as sizar at Trinity College, under Mr Laughton (formerly Librarian of the College, and at this time Librarian of the University and Chaplain of the College) on 14 April, 1702. During the years 1704, 1705, he acted as Under Librarian[1]. He was admitted scholar 28 April, 1704; and took the degrees of B.A. 170$\frac{4}{5}$, M.A. 1709, D.D. 1724.

As we have said, Mr Banks's acceptance of a living vacated the Librarianship, and three days after, carefully observing Sir Edward Stanhope's prohibition of delay, the Seniority proceeded to a fresh election. Under 22 Nov. 1706, there is a Conclusion, "Sir Clegat, Batchelor of Arts and Scholar of this College, was elected Library Keeper, in the room of Mr Banks, who vacated his place by accepting a living. Ri. Bentley, Mag^{r} Coll." Clagett retained his post till 1716, but what led to his resignation then I am unable to say. While he was Librarian, he acted on several occasions as "Tutor," as Laughton certainly, and Griffith as I believe, had done before him, though this was not strictly speaking in accordance with Sir Edward Stanhope's requirements. On 19 June, 1708, Thomas Trevor, eldest son of Lord Trevor, was admitted as Fellow-Commoner, under Mr Clagett; on 25 April, 1709, Thomas Sharpe, son of the Archbishop of York, was so admitted, as Pensioner; and on 1 Jan. 171$\frac{3}{4}$, William Belasyse, son of Sir Henry Belasyse, of Brancepeth, was so admitted as Fellow-Commoner (from Christ's College).

In a letter of Bentley to Archbishop Wake, of 13 Aug. 1728, while denying that his nephew, in his Librarianship, had ever accepted any office or lecture in the College, and so broken Sir Edward Stanhope's rule, he adds "but his Predecessors have frequently." He then cites the first two of the above[2].

Clagett was Librarian when Uffenbach paid his visit to Cambridge in 1710, on which occasion he examined Trinity

[2] Bentley Correspondence, p. 681.

Library on July 29, 30, Aug. 4[1]. Uffenbach mentions that it was his custom to confine his attention in the first instance to what a librarian regarded as most remarkable, "but afterwards I search for myself, having often found far better for myself, owing to the ignorance of many librarians which one cannot but wonder at and deplore[2]." He then proceeds to mention what Clagett showed him on this occasion. Certainly he made a curious choice to begin with, a transcript on vellum of the Codex Bezæ made for Archbishop Whitgift [B. 10. 3]. This was followed by "some oriental MSS.," a missal on vellum, a volume of "very fine sketches taken in Italy," and a "few coins in two drawers." Uffenbach makes no personal comment on Clagett, as he does on good Thomas Baker at St John's. A few years later, an English traveller speaks cordially enough. Ralph Thoresby, on his second visit to Cambridge, records in his Diary under the date 7 July, 1714, "He [Dr Colbatch] very courteously showed me the stately library, of which the obliging Mr Claget is Keeper, whose company also I enjoyed[3]."

Like his predecessor Laughton, we find Clagett aiding Strype in his historical work. He catalogued for him the MSS. in Trinity Library containing the proceedings against Barret and Baro in 1595–6[4]. This now stands as B. 14. 9[5].

I have already said that Clagett resigned the Librarianship in 1716, though I do not know from what cause. About this time, however, he was Chaplain to Charles, Earl of Sunderland[6], and he may have received some appointment from him, or have been in attendance on his patron. Anyhow, in the autumn of 1717, he was made Rector of Pulham St Mary in Norfolk (his predecessor died 13 Oct. 1717) and retained it till 1721[1], when he was succeeded by Michael Clagett, M.A., doubtless a kinsman[2].

On 5 Oct. 1721, Clagett was presented by the Earl of Sunderland to the Rectory of Brington, Northamptonshire. He appears to have held this living till he became Bishop of Exeter, for his successor, Will. Mayo, M.A., who had been his curate, was not appointed till 30 Sept. 1742[3].

Clagett was appointed Archdeacon of Buckingham, 1 Sept. 1722[4]. Nichols mentions[5] a curious incident of this part of his life. While Clagett was at Hanover in 1723 with George I., the king gave him the Rectory of St Martin's in the Fields, and Clagett "actually kissed hands upon the occasion." The Lord Chancellor, however, had already presented Zachary Pearse to it, and on the king's return to England, the Chancellor carried the day.

It may have been by way of consolation for this that Clagett received his next preferment. He was appointed Dean of Rochester, 8 Feb. 172$\frac{3}{4}$[6]. He next became Bishop of St David's, in succession to Bishop Sydall; the date of the congé d'élire being 17 Dec. 1731, and that of the consecration, 23 Jan. 173$\frac{1}{2}$[7].

At this period of his life, Clagett was a friend of Browne Willis, the Antiquary, who in his will, dated 15 Dec. 1741, bequeathed "coins of five guineas value" to the Bishop of St David's and others[8]; but in a subsequent codicil he revoked all these bequests[9]. Willis survived the Bishop several years and died in 1760.

From St David's, Clagett was translated to Exeter in succession to Bishop Weston, and the appointment was confirmed in Bow Church, 2 Aug. 1742[1]. For the details of Clagett's Exeter life, save in so far as I refer to Le Neve, I am indebted to the kindness of Winslow Jones, Esq., of Exmouth, to whom also are due the accompanying references. Mr Jones further mentions, though not as a certainly established fact, that Clagett is said to have been collated by the Bishop (Willis) of Winchester, to the Rectory of Overton, Hampshire, 31 Oct. 1731.

On 2 Aug. 1742, the day on which Clagett was confirmed as Bishop of Exeter, he was instituted, in commendam, to the Treasurership of Exeter Cathedral, vacant by the death of Bishop Weston, on the presentation of George II.[2], and was also appointed Archdeacon and Prebendary of Exeter[3]. On 19 Aug. 1742, he was installed and enthroned[4], and on 21 Aug. he was elected Canon Residentiary[5], but he does not seem to have attended a single meeting of the Chapter.

He died 8 Dec. 1746, and was buried on 11 Dec. at St Margaret's, Westminster. He retained until his death the Bishopric, Treasurership, Archdeaconry, Prebend and Canonry, as well as the Rectory of Shobrooke. Dr George Lavington succeeded to all his preferments.

This grim picture of the abuses which were tolerated in the Church at the time is not even ended by death, for the note subjoined as to Bishop Clagett's will, which Mr Winslow Jones has kindly sent me, shows that for a year after death the Canonry was still in the grasp of the dead hand.

The will is dated 2 May, 1746, and a codicil 13 June, 1746, and was proved in the Prerogative Court of Canterbury, 16 Dec. following, by Samuel Clagett, the brother, and his friend Mr Daniel Gill, the executors.

By his will Bishop Clagett desired to be buried in the church or churchyard of the parish in which he should die, and the burial to be ordered in the most frugal manner. All his personal estate is to be divided into three equal parts, and distributed between his brother Mr Samuel Clagett of St Edmund's Bury, and his sisters Mrs Jane and Mrs Margaret Clagett. To his nephew Mr William Clagett he gave £1 and no more, and to his nephew's mother one shilling, and he desired his brother Mr Samuel Clagett and his friend Mr Gill to undertake the execution of his will. By the codicil, he directed his annus post mortem in right of his Canonry of Exeter, to be divided into three parts between his brother Samuel and his sisters Jane and Margaret.

Clagett had verses in the Epicedium Cantabrigiense (Cantab. 1708) on the death of Prince George of Denmark, the husband of Queen Anne.

The life of Archdeacon Clagett in the Biographia Britannica was written from "Memoirs" supplied by his son, the Bishop.

The Bishop of Exeter kindly tells me that there is no portrait of Bishop Clagett in the Palace at Exeter, and that none is known to exist in or about Exeter. I have also to thank the Bishop of St David's, who informs me that he possesses a pencil sketch of Bishop Clagett, taken from a painting, the present habitat which, however, he unfortunately forgets.

In the Dictionary of National Biography, it is remarked of Clagett[1], "he was doubtless educated at the grammar school in his native town, and proceeded thence to Cambridge, but again no particulars remain." One would have thought the Graduati Cantabrigienses a sufficiently familiar book, a reference to which would have given Clagett's College and degrees, when the College books might be trusted to give further details, as we have seen above.

(XI.) WILLIAM CHICHELEY. [29 Sept. 1716—12 Jan. 171$\frac{8}{7}$.]

Clagett had resigned his post as Librarian at some time in the summer of 1716, though I am quite unaware as to the cause. The Master and Seniors, however, permitted the post to remain vacant longer than the fourteen days allowed by Sir Edward Stanhope to elapse between the knowledge of a vacancy coming to the College and the election of a new Librarian; and the Archbishop of Canterbury (Wake) accordingly availed himself of the power bestowed upon him by the will of the founder to appoint to the vacant post a person qualified under the conditions laid down in the will.

In the famous dispute between Bentley and Archbishop Wake in 1728, Bentley refers to the earlier incident of 1716, and states[1] that the post vacated by Clagett had been allowed to remain vacant in excess of the permitted time, in order that it might be bestowed upon the best of the Scholars who failed to obtain a Fellowship.

The Archbishop's nominee was William Chicheley[2] (or Chichley). He was the third son of Admiral Sir John Chichley, M.P., who was ninth in descent from William Chichley, Sheriff of London in 1410, the youngest brother of Archbishop Chichele, the founder of All Souls' College, Oxford[3].

William Chicheley was educated at Westminster, then under Dr Knipe, where he was admitted in 1705[4]. He was entered as pensioner at Trinity, 28 June, 1709, under Mr Baker, being then of the age of eighteen. In the Admission-Book, he is described as the son of the late John Chicheley, eques auratus of "Wimple" (Wimpole), Cambridgeshire.

He was admitted Scholar of the College, 22 April, 1710; and took the degrees of B.A. 171$\frac{2}{3}$, and M.A. 1716.

He was appointed Librarian by the Archbishop's mandate,

[1] Bentley Correspondence, p. 680.

[2] I spell the name thus at the head of the section because it is in this way that Chicheley spells his name at his Admission to the Librarianship.

10 Sept. 1716, and was admitted on Sept. 29. In his declaration at Admission there is no reference to the action of the Archbishop, as we shall see in the subsequent case of Hutchinson. The fact is thus noted in Edward Rud's Diary, under the date 28 Sept. 1716, "They chose 5 Fellows...but were overreach'd by Mr Chichely as to the Library-Keeper's place. It had laps'd to the Archbishop, and Mr C. brought down his Grace's mandate. D^r^ As[henhurst] did not like the man, and thereupon insisted mightily upon rejecting the mandate; which D^r^ B[entley] seem'd inclinable to do, till he was disswaded by a wiser head, and so he was admitted[1]."

Chicheley resigned the Librarianship after three months' tenure. He died sine prole in 1737.

(XII.) Edward Peach. [12 Jan. 171$\frac{6}{7}$—2 Oct. 1717.]

The new Librarian, like his predecessor, retained his office, it will be seen, for a few months only.

He was the son of Thomas Peach, of London, and had been educated at St Paul's School, then under Mr Postlethwaite. He was entered pensioner at Trinity, 11 April, 1710 (his father being then dead), under Mr Cotes. He was admitted Scholar, 14 April, 1711, and took the degrees of B.A. in 171$\frac{3}{4}$ and M.A. in 1717[2].

He was elected Librarian, on Chicheley's resignation, on 12 Jan. 171$\frac{6}{7}$, and was admitted on Jan. 25. On 2 Oct. 1717, he was elected and admitted Chaplain, thus vacating the Librarianship, and retained his Chaplaincy till 1737 inclusive[3].

On 1 Oct. 1737, John Baker, D.D., was elected Chaplain, and in the Senior Bursar's book for 1738, his name takes Peach's place. How the vacancy had arisen, I do not know.

[1] Diary, p. 18, edited by Dr Luard for the Cambridge Antiquarian Society.

[2] This last degree is wrongly omitted in the printed edition of the Graduati.

[3] His name occurs as Chaplain in the Senior Bursar's books from 1718 till 1737 inclusive, and then disappears.

In Mr Foster's Alumni Oxonienses, occur the names of John and Henry Peach, sons of Edward Peach, clerk, of Whitchurch, Oxon., both of whom matriculated at St John's College, Oxford, in 1757. Canon Slatter, the Rector of Whitchurch, kindly informs me that Edward Peach was never Rector of Whitchurch, but that a curate of that name was there in 1737. He can only trace one occurrence of the signature (viz. in 1737), but from the identity of the handwriting of the entries in the Register, he is disposed to think that the entries from 1727 to 1748 are in Peach's writing.

The name of Edward Peach does not occur in the list of members of the University of Oxford given by Mr Foster, nor is any to be found in those of Cambridge, save our present Librarian. The following fact given me by Canon Slatter makes it reasonably probable that the curate of Whitchurch had previously been the Librarian of Trinity. In 1723, Samuel Walker became Rector of Whitchurch, and retained his post till 1768. He had been a Fellow of Trinity College, Cambridge, and had taken his B.A. in 171$\frac{8}{9}$, M.A. 1716. He was therefore one year senior in College standing to Peach, and they were scholars of the College at the same time. Consequently, Walker may have been glad to give to an old College friend the curacy of his living, which was evidently a sole charge, from the continuous appearance of one handwriting in the Register, which is not Walker's, for twenty-one years.

(XIII.) Samuel Doody. [1717—1721.]

Samuel Doody was the son of Joseph Doody, of Stafford, and was educated at the Charterhouse, under Dr Walker. At the age of 17, he was entered as pensioner at Trinity, 30 June 1711, under Mr Pilgrim. He was admitted Scholar, 1 May, 1713, and took the degrees of B.A. 171$\frac{4}{5}$ and of M.A. 1718. On 3 July, 1722, he was incorporated as M.A. at Oxford, as Samuel Darby[1].

I do not find any reference in the Conclusion Book to his election as Librarian, but he was admitted, 2 Oct. 1717. He held his post for four years to the day, for his successor was admitted 2 Oct. 1721. Doody became Chaplain on ceasing to be Librarian, though again I find no record of his election or of his admission. However, the date of Bentley's admission as Librarian shews when the change was made; and Doody clearly became Chaplain at the beginning of the academic year 1721–22, for in the Senior Bursar's book for the year ending Michaelmas, 1722, Doody receives the full year's stipend as Chaplain.

On 19 Dec. 1721, he was presented by the College to the Vicarage of Monks' Kirby, in Warwickshire, holding the living and the chaplaincy together. He died in the autumn of 1727 (I do not know the date more exactly), and on Oct. 28 the vacant chaplaincy was given to Mr Smith, and on 29 Jan. 172⅞ the Vicarage was given to Mr Joseph Key, Master of Arts of the College. The date of Mr Doody's death might perhaps have been recovered from the Monks' Kirby Register, but I learn through the kindness of the Rev. W. E. Jackson, the present Vicar, that the Registers are missing for the years 1717—1733 inclusive.

A posthumous gleam of Mr Doody meets us in the Junior Bursar's book for the year ending Michaelmas, 1729, where among payments received is one "from Mr Doody's Executor, £10, for the plate lost by the said Mr Doody."

(XIV.) Thomas Bentley. [1721—1729.]

After one or two holders of the office, as to whom it is difficult to do more than collect a few unimportant facts, we come, in the person of the new Librarian, to a scholar who himself stood high in the world of letters, and is still better known from his connection with his famous uncle, Dr Richard Bentley, Master of Trinity, the "awful Aristarch" of the Dunciad.

Thomas Bentley was the son of James Bentley, the elder brother of Richard Bentley, of Oulton near Wakefield, gentleman. He was educated at St Paul's School, then under Mr

Postlethwaite; and was entered, at the age of sixteen, as pensioner at Trinity, under Dr Syke (Sike), on 19 Dec. 1707. We have in the Appendix to Dr Luard's edition of Edward Rud's Diary, a letter, dated 20 Nov. 1707, from Dr Bentley to Mr Postlethwaite respecting his nephew. Thomas Bentley, when staying in Trinity, had "given such a specimen of his studiousness and discretion," that his uncle had already been pressed by several to admit him to the College. This Dr Bentley would not do without communicating with Mr Postlethwaite, but since the nephew is now sixteen years of age and would be capable of taking Holy Orders by the time he commenced M.A.[1], the uncle proposes to admit him at Christmas and desires Mr Postlethwaite to send him to Cambridge as soon as the holidays begin[2]. Another letter follows from Dr Bentley to Dr Stubbe, the Vice-Master, dated 27 Jan. 1708, when Thomas Bentley was in his first term of residence, in which he remarks, "I ..... particularly am glad that my nephew deserves your good opinion[3]."

Thomas Bentley was admitted Scholar, 13 May, 1709, and Minor Fellow 2 Oct. 1714, becoming Major Fellow 8 July, 1715. He took the degrees of B.A. 171½, M.A. 1715, and LL.D. 1724.

The younger Bentley was evidently an amiable man, of scholarly tastes, and apparently of somewhat delicate health. Thus in a letter of Jeremiah Markland to Mr Bowyer (22 Nov. 1764), it is remarked, "Dr Bentley used often to say to his nephew, Tom, I shall thrash thee, meaning that he should outlive him[4]." The uncle was thirty years older than the nephew, and survived him by six weeks.

The earliest literary work of Thomas Bentley appeared in 1713, while he was still merely a B.A. It was a small edition of Horace [Q. Horatius Flaccus, ad nuperam Ricardi Bentleii editionem accurate expressus. Notas addidit Thomas Bentleius

[1] As a matter of fact, Thomas Bentley did not take Holy Orders, and thus his Fellowship would have lapsed.

A.B. Coll. S. Trinitatis apud Cantabrigienses alumnus. Cantab. typis Academicis, impensis C. Crownfield, 1713], in which he reproduced his uncle's text, with the various readings in the margin, and with notes of a somewhat elementary character. As Bishop Monk remarks[1], doubtless the large size and high price of Dr Bentley's Horace had led to a rather small circulation, and probably the uncle was glad to give his text a wider publicity through the agency of his nephew's "small" edition. Moreover, it was not an unnatural thing, that Dr Bentley having dedicated his Horace to the Earl of Oxford, Thomas Bentley should dedicate his to Lord Oxford's son, Lord Harley. He states that his uncle suggested the plan of the book, but had not seen it before its publication.

Attacks were made upon this work from two very different quarters. In 1717, Richard Johnson, Headmaster of Nottingham School, put forth a work, whose full title may be cited as a specimen of the good old style:—"Aristarchus Anti-Bentleianus, Quadraginta Sex Bentleii Errores super Q. Horatii Flacci Odarum Libro Primo Spissos Nonnullos, Et Erubescendos: Item per Notas Universas in Latinitate Lapsus fœdissimos Nonaginta Ostendens." In the Preface to this work it is suggested that the work bearing the nephew's name is in reality that of the uncle, who took the opportunity of applauding himself[2]. It is obvious that the charge is absurd and improbable in the highest degree.

The next attack, which takes a different stand, came from a very different quarter, Pope's Dunciad. In the first edition of this poem (1728) a couplet ran

> "* * his mouth with Classic flatt'ry opes,
> And the puft Orator bursts out in tropes[3]."

In the edition of 1729, Welsted's name was inserted in the place of the asterisks. In 1736, "Welsted" was replaced by [1] Life of Richard Bentley, Vol. i. p. 340, ed. 2.

"Bentley[1]." In this last edition, Pope gives the following malignant note on the passage:—

"Not spoken of the famous Dr Bentley, but of one Tho. Bentley, a small critic, who aped his uncle in a little Horace. The great one was intended to be dedicated to the Lord Halifax, but (on a change of the ministry) was given to the Earl of Oxford; for which reason the little one was dedicated to his son the Lord Harley. A taste of his Classic Elocution may be seen in his following panegyric on the Peace of Utrecht. ...But that this gentleman can write in a different style, may be seen in a letter he printed to Mr Pope[2]."

What the letter is which is referred to in the last sentence does not appear. Presumably Thomas Bentley, who seems to have been warmly attached to his uncle, had written a letter, not now traceable, in the public journals. Mr Courthope[3] thinks that "probably the letter was written in consequence of Pope's notes signed 'Bentley' to the 'Sober Advice from Horace,' which was published in 1734, and called forth a protest from Richard Bentley the younger." Dr Monk[4] conjectured "from circumstances" that the letter was written in 1740, but Mr Courthope points out that the note itself appeared in the edition of the Dunciad of 1736.

In 1718, Thomas Bentley brought out at Cambridge an edition of Cicero's de Finibus.

It will be remembered that, in Dr Bentley's letter to Mr Postlethwaite, he referred to the possibility of his nephew taking Holy Orders. The younger Bentley, however did not so proceed, and consequently under the then Statutes, his Fellowship would lapse after the expiration of seven years from his

[2] Ed. cit. p. 145.

[3] Ibid. p. 331.

[4] Op. cit. vol. ii. p. 464. Here Dr Monk cites a letter from Pope to Warburton, who had suggested to the poet "some ludicrous comparison, as applicable to the uncle and nephew." He replies, "Your simile of B—— and his nephew, would make an excellent epigram. But all satire is become so ineffectual, when the last step that virtue can stand upon, shame, is taken away...." Whatever Bentley's faults were, one can but feel indignant at this Thersites-like malignity.

M.A. degree. Some months before the limit was reached, Mr Doody resigned the Librarianship, as I have already said, and on 2 Oct. 1721, Bentley was admitted Librarian, but I find no entry as to his election in the Conclusion-Book.

In Knight's Life of Dr John Colet [1724], Thomas Bentley's name occurs in the list of subscribers. It will be remembered that he had been a Pauline.

In 1725 and 1726, we find Thomas Bentley collating MSS. for his uncle, and doing other learned work, at Paris, Lyons, Rome and Naples. Seven letters from the nephew to the uncle are printed in the Bentley Correspondence[1], and describe the work and movements of the former. The first of the seven is written from Paris, and being imperfect the date is lost, but the others range in date from 16 Nov. 1725 to 2 Aug. 1726, during the whole of which time Thomas Bentley was on the Continent. As these letters are in print, it is sufficient here to say that they testify alike to very considerable learning on the part of Thomas Bentley, and to affectionate relations between nephew and uncle. At Paris, the traveller met, among other scholars, Montfaucon, Banduri and Harduin. There is a remark in the first letter from Rome, evidently referring to the Old Pretender; —"I have seen him. He has not εἶδος ἄξιον τυραννίδος[2]." In a later letter, he has just seen the famous Vatican MS. (Cod. B.)—"The Gr. Test. that Mico did for you. That's a Glorious Old Book. I have a good mind to collate it again for curiosity[3]."

There is no direct reference in these letters to the Library of which Thomas Bentley was Librarian. Once, when speaking of Mark Antony's Aqueduct at Lyons, he says "in one place where it crosses a valley, 'tis as high as our Library[4]." Again, he asks leave to purchase books at Rome, "that would be very fit for a Library," and suggests some, adding, "It will look like doing something as Library Keeper[5]."

With the year 1728 came the curious and intricate dispute between Richard Bentley and Archbishop Wake as to the

[1] Pp. 627 sqq. [2] P. 636. [3] P. 656.
[4] P. 646. [5] P. 660.

Librarianship. The story is fully told in Bishop Monk's Life of Bentley, and as it is a matter appertaining to the history of the elder Bentley, rather than to that of his nephew, I shall only briefly indicate the course of the dispute. There is, in the Archiepiscopal Library at Lambeth, a large mass of papers [no. 1156], through which I have carefully worked, but nearly all of special interest have been printed in the Bentley Correspondence. I have already embodied in the section on Clutterbuck the documents in connection with him, and some others will be cited in a note appended to this and a following section.

On 28 June, 1728, Colbatch, alike one of the ablest as he was one of the most persevering of Bentley's adversaries, together with Parne petitioned the Archbishop to intervene in the matter of the Librarianship, which they declared Thomas Bentley had forfeited, both by his long absences from his post, inasmuch as during six or seven years he had never been in residence for more than three months in any one year, and also because he had taken the degree of LL.D. in defiance, it was said, of Sir Edward Stanhope's regulation. The petitioners then recommend to the Archbishop, Sandys Hutchinson, B.A. and scholar of the College, for the post.

The Archbishop having communicated with the Master, the latter replies, and his letter is given in the Bentley Correspondence[1]. As regards the first of the two charges, what I have already said as to Thomas Bentley's Continental travels will show that there was a good deal of laxity in the matter, and the uncle does not dispute the fact, but defends it by saying that his nephew had worked at Greek and Latin MSS. in various Continental Libraries, with the view to publication; that this was done at his own expense, and that he had appointed a Deputy Librarian. As regards the other charge it will suffice to say that it is clear that Sir Edward Stanhope's meaning was that no one should be appointed Librarian, who, at the time of appointment, was of over M.A. standing. This is at once shown by the fact that in the case of a Librarian proceeding to a higher degree after his appointment, no penalty is provided by

Sir Edward, which he is very careful to do in other cases. Bentley goes also into other points, e.g. his nephew had not taken any other office, though his predecessors had frequently done so; Clagett is named as an example. He shows further that various orders had become obsolete, and that the College had itself very considerably increased the value of the post, and pro tanto had a right to have a co-ordinate voice with the Founder's Will. The land bought with the Stanhope bequest brings in, says Bentley, £32 per annum, but the present charges to the College of Librarian and Under-Librarian were £77.

A vigorous correspondence ensued, in which Richard Bentley's letters are characterised by a marked ingenuity and by a system of truly Fabian tactics. Though doubtless Thomas Bentley can have had no special desire to retain a post at which he was hardly ever present, yet an argument was drawn up in his name, and this is subscribed by the Master and eight Fellows, to the effect that they are satisfied with his reasons and that the post is not vacant. Bishop Monk justly observes[1] that the style of the document, professedly the work of the nephew, is unmistakeably from the pen of the uncle. Indeed the last paragraph, which Bishop Monk cites, can only be called contemptuous.

After a time, the Archbishop, probably getting weary of the matter, proposed to Bentley (10 Dec. 1728) to leave the decision to the Attorney-General (Sir Philip Yorke), and he, on 1 March, 172$\frac{8}{9}$, declared that Thomas Bentley had not forfeited his post under the conditions of Sir Edward Stanhope's will, and that, as he had not received three admonitions for neglect from the Master and Seniors, the post was not vacant. This would have made an end of the matter, had it not been that the Archbishop had already nominated as Librarian Sandys Hutchinson, who had been recommended by Colbatch and Parne, and he was disposed to stand upon his assumed rights. One would have thought that, if the Attorney-General were right, as one cannot doubt, there never had been a vacancy, and therefore the Archbishop had no locus standi. At this stage, Thomas Bentley resigned the Librarianship, and on 20 June, 1729, a successor was appointed. The Conclusion runs "Agreed by the Master and Seniors that Mr Gossipp be chosen into the place of Library Keeper, now void by the voluntary cession of Dr Thomas Bentley. Ri: Bentley."

The further story of the dispute has now no connection with Thomas Bentley, but must be spoken of in connection with Gossip and Hutchinson.

A note of Mr Bowyer refers to Thomas Bentley under the year 1730. In that year, the oration before the University on Jan. 30, in memory of Charles I., was delivered by John Taylor, M.A., Fellow of St John's, afterwards Librarian and Registrary of the University. On this Nichols[1] cites a MS. note of Mr Bowyer;—"Thomas Bentley, an awkward imitator of his uncle Richard, attacked the Latinity of this Oration, criticising anonymously in a newspaper the first sentence, as an unusual construction without two infinitive moods after fore; which the Doctor vindicated in conversation, by authorities both ancient and modern. He was abused in the same channel for saying the Scots sold their king; a fact well attested." Bowyer does not give his authority for his statement.

Some years later, in 1733, an accident befell Thomas Bentley, the effects of which were disastrous, and might well have proved fatal. He had had entrusted to him by Dr Mead the unfinished notes of Dr John Davies on the Philosophical writings of Cicero. These he was to edit, and to continue the notes on the de Officiis from the point where Davies had left it unfinished at his death. Accordingly Thomas Bentley devoted himself to this work at his lodgings in the Strand, but having contracted the dangerous habit of reading in bed, he managed to set the house on fire, and had barely time to escape with his life. All his papers were destroyed, including the whole of Davies's notes, and some unedited scholia on Homer[2]. Bishop Monk mentions to condemn an unfounded view which attributes the fire not to Thomas Bentley, but to his uncle.

Thomas Bentley brought out two works in the concluding years of his life. In 1741, appeared his edition of the Hymns of Callimachus, Theognis, etc., with Latin translation and notes[1]: and in 1742 an edition of Cæsar, with Dr Jurin's notes and emendations added. This work must have been published not long before Thomas Bentley's death. He was in ill health and was sent to Clifton for change of air. One day he went for an excursion on the river, was taken very ill, and died before he could be landed. He is buried in the church at Clifton, with the following inscription: Hic jacet corpus | Thomæ Bentley LL.D. | Qui obiit xxviii Maii | Anno 1742, | Ætat. 50[2]. His famous uncle survived him a little more than six weeks.

Note A.

Among the documents of the Wake-Bentley controversy in the Lambeth Library, are some papers connected with John Kay, under-Librarian in 1728, which show that besides the main dispute, of which I have already spoken, and of whose future outcome I must speak in the two following sections, there was also another curious side play. It is true that these papers have no bearing on the life of any actual Librarian, but as (to the best of my knowledge) nothing has ever appeared in print on the matter, and as it throws further light on the troubled College history, I have thought it worth dwelling on here.

John Kay, the son of William Kay of Caythorpe, was educated at Kirk-Leatham School, under Mr Thomas Clark, and thus was a schoolfellow of Gossip and Hutchinson. On 1 July, 1723, being then 18 years of age, he was entered as sub-sizar at Trinity under Mr Walker, afterwards Vice-Master, cruelly immortalized by Pope.

[1] For some remarks as to the aim of this work, see Wordsworth, Scholæ Academicæ, p. 110.

[2] Monk ii. 408.

Kay was under-Librarian during the years 1724—30 inclusive, as is shown by the Senior Bursar's books. He never took a degree, a matter which is referred to in the affidavit subjoined, as well as in his letter to John Mawer, and elsewhere, yet on 12 March, 172$\frac{7}{8}$, he was presented by the Vice-Master (Baker) and Seniors to the Vicarage of Roxton, then vacant by the cession of Mr Penson.

He evidently belonged to the party of Bentley's sympathisers in the College, and so may well have been brought before the Archbishop's notice by the leading members of that party, as against Hutchinson, who was backed by Colbatch and Parne, the Master's keenest foes.

The beginning of the story is told in the affidavit [Lambeth 1156, no. 29], and therefore, though the affidavit is itself of later date than some of the other documents, I give it first. It bears two embossed stamps for sixpence each. It runs as follows:

I, John Kay, under Library keeper of Trinity College in the University of Cambridge, make oath, that on Thursday, 3rd October (as I believe) about one of the clock in the afternoon, Dr Walker, one of the fellows of the said College, called me from the gate, which is called the Queen's gate, where I was with three or four other lads, and asked me if the Head Library Keeper's place should be resigned, whether I could like it better than the preferment I am now possessed of: I answered yes; and gave him my Reasons for it, which he said he approved of, and ordered me to wait upon Dr Baker, one of the Fellows and Vice-Master of the said College, and tell him so. Dr Walker likewise said that I must resign all that I now had and take my Degree before I could be qualified for the place. I afterwards (according to Dr Walker's directions) waited upon Dr Baker at his chambers and gave him an account how far I had proceeded in regulating the Catalogues of the Library, which he wished me to go on with. Because if the Head Library Keeper's place should become vacant, it might be some recommendation to the Bishop (sic). At the same time he told me that we wanted a Resident Head Library Keeper to keep it in order, and to prevent so many lads from coming into the Library: he also said he would let me know when I should wait upon the Master about it, because the Master liked to have every person speak for himself.

This is the sum of all that passed between Dr Walker, Dr Baker and me to the best of my remembrance relating to the said Library Keeper's place.

Dr Walker went out of town on Thursday the 3rd inst. immediately after he had spoke to me, as is above mentioned and is not yet returned to College, nor have I had any letter nor received any message from him since he left this place.

Neither did Dr Baker speak one word to me about this affair from the time above mentioned that I was with him at his chambers till Saturday the 19th of this instant and so came to me to desire me to recollect and write down all that had passed between me, Dr Walker and himself, concerning the Head Library Keeper's Place, which accordingly is now done.

JOHN KAY.

Jurat coram me viceno nono die Octobris 1728.

JAMES WHISKIN[1].

The next reference in point of time is in a letter [no. 10] of Parne to the Archbishop, dated 9 Oct. 1728, where it is remarked,

"To my certain knowledge ye Place hath been offered to ye under Librarian within these few days. Tho' as he had no degree, nor could have any til ye Term began (which it doth tomorrow) and fearing y^r Grace might nominate one who might contest it with him, He hath not yet accepted of it. Nor wil it do him any good, for he must quit other things of very much worth, to have it."

We next come to an undated letter of the Archbishop [no. 16], which, however, I should assign to about Oct. 14, to the Master, in which after expressing his surprise that he had not been informed of the result of the meeting of the Seniority he remarks,

"Instead of this, I had an account which I thought I might depend upon [this of course refers to Parne], that the place had been offered to another person, who though not at that time qualified for it, (as having no degree), yet, the term coming on, might soon obtain one; and so my right of nomination be defeated for want of being beforehand in asserting it."

He therefore sent the nomination by Saturday's post[2].

[1] James Whiskin was Mayor of Cambridge in 1717, on the occasion of George I.'s visit, and in 1728 on that of George II. (Cooper's Annals of Cambridge, iv. 150, 198.)

[2] Bentley Correspondence, p. 688. The Saturday would clearly be Oct. 12, for Bentley, writing to the Archbishop on Sunday, Oct. 20, says that he received the nomination from Mr Parne and Mr Hutchinson "last Wednesday

No. 21 of the Lambeth papers is, I think, the answer to the foregoing. It is a repudiation of the charge contained in the Archbishop's letter, on the part of the Master and Seniors. They declare that they had discussed the question on Oct. 1 and at several meetings since, and the delay was accounted for by the Librarian's illness. There was no desire to waste time so that the Archbishop's time for appointment might lapse. They ask who it was that had written to the Archbishop. This is dated Oct. 19, and is signed by the Master, and Drs Baker V.-M., Hacket, Craister and Paris, and Joh. Myers, B.D.

Closely following on this, we have Parne's letter to the Archbishop of Oct. 24 [no. 19]. In this Parne states that he has learnt that on the previous Monday (Oct. 21) a paper, intended to be laid before the Archbishop, was sent round to some persons to be signed in the name of the Master and Seniors, though only half the Seniors were in College, and the paper was not laid before the [next[1]] most senior. Parne does not know the contents of the document, as "it was managed so very privately." He has learnt, however, one thing, that the Archbishop is asked to tell the Master and Seniors who it was that informed him of the offer of the Librarianship to the Under-Librarian about the beginning of October. He asks the Archbishop, if he thinks proper, either to send his letter to the Master or to name him directly.

The Archbishop's answer to this is dated Oct. 25 [no. 20]. He begins by citing part of his (undated) letter to the Master, and part of the statement of the Master and Seniors to which I have already referred, which concluded with the words "nor was any offer made of the Library Keeper's place with our knowledge and privity." The Archbishop will not mention Parne's name, in spite of leave given, unless Parne "can effectually justify" his account against this declaration. Clearly in face of the mention of Dr Baker in Kay's affidavit, the declaration can afternoon," i.e. Oct. 16, so that the letter of the Archbishop may well have been written on Monday, Oct. 14.

[1] This word in brackets is not in the original, but the sense clearly requires it.

only be justified by explaining it of the corporate action of the Seniority.

I would also refer to two letters of Mr Greaves, Commissary of the University and Registrar of Trinity College, to the Archbishop[1]. In the earlier of these [no. 25], dated 28 Oct.[2], 1728, from 7 King's Bench Walk, Temple, he mentions that he had told the Archbishop at their interview that he had received Kay's account in his own handwriting, which would have been sworn to before him, had not he left Cambridge for London on the previous Monday morning, before Kay had returned from his living. This certificate [no. 18], dated Oct. 22, he had sent to the Archbishop. The draught of the Archbishop's letter is written on the back of Mr Greaves's letter, and in a second letter from the latter [no. 27], dated Oct. 30, which explains the confusion as to the two certificates, he forwards the affidavit itself.

The only other letter I need mention is one from Kay to John Mawer[3] [no. 24], at that time a B.A. scholar of the College and a former schoolfellow of Kay. What we have at Lambeth, however, is evidently not the actual letter, but a very rough draught. The writing is absolutely distinct from that of nos. 18 and 29, and can only be called a scrawl. It is neither signed nor dated, but internal evidence connects it undoubtedly with Kay, and the date must of course be October, 1728, and before the interview with Dr Baker referred to in the affidavit. The piece of paper is very jagged and torn, and before being used for the draught of the letter, had evidently begun to be used for another purpose, for there is a reference to Guillim's Heraldry on the reverse side.

In this letter Kay asks for a little money, as he may have to take a degree. He mentions the complaint to the Archbishop about the Librarianship, and adds that Dr Walker had asked him if he would like to be Head Library Keeper.

[3] John Mawer was educated at Kirk-Leatham School under Mr Clark (for whom see note under William Gossip), was entered as pensioner at Trinity under Mr Smith, 20 June, 1721, and was admitted Scholar 6 April, 1722. He took the degrees of B.A. 172⅔, and M.A. 1736.

"You will not be at a loss for my answer, seeing you know how much I like a College life. So he referr'd me to Dr Baker for further information, for he was going to take horse on some journey; whom I have not yet discoursed with, for he was engaged when I waited on him. I hope our malcontents will get nothing by the troubles they give the M^r^, but I may perchance be bettered by them and little to their satisfaction."

Kay then wishes Mawer to write an epithalamium for "Miss Jugg's[1]" marriage. They made "a very handsome appearance at Sturbridge[2]."

Of Kay's subsequent history I know nothing.

Note B.

The extract in the following is not indeed strictly relevant to the subject of this work, yet I have inserted it here as being the only allusion to the architectural character of the Old Library that I ever met with. It is taken from no. 7 of the Lambeth documents, which is the answer by Colbatch and Parne to Thomas Bentley's argument. Clearly, for some reason, Bentley and his party fancied it suited their interest to lay as much stress as possible on the immense change involved in the removal to the "new Library"; Colbatch and Parne on the other hand seek to minimise the difference.

The statement following is given as the second of two things which have been affirmed, "which, if they are anything to the purpose, are by no means true":—

"That the old Library was made out of Garrets, and wou'd only hold three or four thousand Books; and is now fitted into Garret Chambers again. Whereas it was built on purpose for a Library, and just such a Garret as a great part of the Bodleian Library is, that is a lofty Room with a vaulted and curiously wrought roof, though in the third story; and it would commodiously hold ten or twelve thousand books."

[1] This is Miss Joanna Bentley, who was married to Mr Denison Cumberland in the summer of 1728.

[2] Sturbridge Fair was "proclaimed" on Sep. 18. See Wall-Gunning, p. 129.

It continues,

"Great part of it on the Removal of the Books to the New Library was fitted up by the Duke of Somerset into Lodgings for his own Family, when any of them shou'd come here. Two of his Grace's sons successively kept in them; nor is there any but our own, and one or two more Mrs Lodges in Town which have so stately a set of apartments in them. A Fourth part indeed or more of it was seized by the Ma^r and let out, as if it had been a Garrett over part of his Lodge."

(XV.) William Gossip. [1729.]

I have cited in the preceding section the Conclusion by which Gossip was elected Librarian by the Master and Seniors, in order to complete the story of Thomas Bentley's tenure.

William Gossip, "filius G. (presumably Gulielmi) Gossip, e comit. Ebor." was educated at Kirk-Leatham School in North Yorkshire, then under Mr Clark[1], and was entered as pensioner at Trinity, under Mr Robert Smith, afterwards Master, 17 June, 1722, being then 17 years of age.

He was admitted Scholar, 3 May, 1723, and took the degrees of B.A. 172⅝ and M.A. 1729. He was elected Librarian, as I have said, on 20 June, 1729, but I find no trace of his admission.

Clearly, if the Archbishop had been justified in his nomination of Hutchinson, the resignation of Thomas Bentley, and the subsequent election of Gossip, could not affect matters; and the Court of King's Bench was applied to on behalf of Hutchinson to issue a mandamus to the College to admit the Archbishop's nominee.

The reception of the mandate on the part of the College is

[1] In the Admission Book it runs "sub præsidio D^ni Clark," Dominus of course standing for B.A. This must have been a slip on Gossip's part, for Thomas Clark, who was Head-master of Wakefield Grammar School from 1703 to about Easter, 1720, and then became Head-master of Kirk-Leatham School, was M.A. when appointed to Wakefield. For an account of this very able Head-master see The History of Wakefield Grammar School by M. H. Peacock, M.A., the present Head-master. Mr Peacock informs me that many of Mr Clark's pupils followed him when he was transferred from Wakefield to Kirk-Leatham. Whether Gossip was one of these does not appear. A subsequent Head-master, the Rev. John Clark, Fellow of Trinity College, was one who did so.

shown by the following Conclusion of 25 September, 1729:—"Agreed by the Vice-Master [Baker] and Seniors, that whereas a Mandamus hath been served upon the College from the Court of King's Bench, for the Admission of a Library Keeper, nominated by His Grace the Arch-Bishop of Canterbury, by a Power claimed by His Grace under Sir Edward Stanhope's Will, Mr Sharp be forthwith wrote to, to take opinion of council (sic), how the College ought to proceed."

In the interval of waiting comes the one trace which I can find of Gossip's actually discharging the duties of Librarian. A Conclusion of 23 Oct. 1729 orders:—"Agreed also that Mr Gossip shall be appointed to take care that the several manuscripts, medals, great globes, and skeletons, belonging to the College, be forthwith brought into the Library: and that he revise the catalogue of the manuscripts; and that he make a catalogue of the medals: and that for the future no person be permitted to take any manuscript[1], medal, great globe or skeleton, out of the College Library, without leave from the Master and Seniors." Whether Counsel, when appealed to, spoke discouragingly, or whether Bentley, in view of impending contests, had had enough of the controversy, I cannot say. Anyhow the decision arrived at is clearly due to Bentley's ingenuity: Hutchinson is to be accepted as Librarian, simply under the terms of the Founder's will; Gossip is to be additional Library Keeper, appointed by the College. It will be remembered that Bentley had informed the Archbishop how much the College had augmented the original Stanhope bequest.

Two Conclusions of 3 November, 1729, run as follows:—"Agreed by the Vice-Master and Seniors, that Sandys Hutchinson, Batchelor of Arts of this college, be admitted Library Keeper upon the terms and conditions of Sir Edward Stanhope's last Will and Testament."

[1] As regards MSS. an order to this same effect had been put forth by the Seniority on 15 April, 1673, during the mastership of Isaac Barrow. The repetition of the order on the present occasion is suggestive of considerable laxity of practice.

"Agreed by the Vice-Master and Seniors, that Mr Gossip, Master of Arts of the College, be appointed additional Library Keeper, and that the College will make him satisfaction for his trouble."

Yet it must be noted that spite of the promise to Gossip, I find no trace of his name as receiving payment "for his trouble" in either the Senior or the Junior Bursar's books. The only reference to him of any kind is in the Junior Bursar's book for the year ending Michaelmas, 1729, under "Extraordinaries":—"To Mr Gossip for searching ye Register at York concerning ye Endowment of the Vic. of Kirby Lonsdale... £00. 03. 04."

In 1729, there was a close contest for the Vice-Chancellorship between Dr Lambert of St John's (Tory) and Dr Mawson of Corpus (Whig), when the former received 84 votes as against the 83 of the latter. Mr Gossip voted for Dr Mawson[1].

(XVI.) Sandys Hutchinson. [1729—1740.]

The Archbishop's nominee was the son of Edward Hutchinson, of Boston, Lincolnshire, gentleman, who had died before his son entered Trinity College. He was educated at Kirk-Leatham School, under Mr Clark, and probably was one of those who followed his schoolmaster thither from Wakefield. I have already mentioned that I have learnt from Mr Peacock, the present Head-master of Wakefield School, that a good many boys did so follow their master. That Hutchinson was one of these would seem to follow from the fact that he was a donor to the Wakefield School Library in 1729[2].

He was entered as pensioner at Trinity, on 23 June, 1724, under Dr Smith, afterwards Master, being then 18 years of age. He was admitted Scholar, 16 April, 1725, and took the degrees of B.A. in 172⅞, and M.A. in 1731. He also incorporated as M.A. at Oxford on 22 July, 1732[3].

[1] Cole's MSS. xl. 31. [2] Peacock, p. 169.
[3] Foster, Alumni Oxon. sub nom.

The manner in which he was connected with the dispute between Dr Bentley and the Archbishop has been already mentioned, the first occurrence of his name in the matter being, so far as I have observed, in the petition of Colbatch and Parne of 28 June, 1728 [Lambeth, 1156, no. 1 bis]. This seems to have been sent to the Archbishop, together with a letter of Sir Hardolph Wasteneys, the uncle of Hutchinson, dated Headon, 28 August, 1728 [Lambeth, no. 5 b], which is an answer to a letter of the Archbishop, which does not seem to be forthcoming.

Sir Hardolph urges the two main points on which Colbatch and Parne laid stress, and appeals to their petition in corroboration, and maintains that the Archbishop has power to fill up the place. He had clearly been shewn Bentley's letter of Aug. 13 to the Archbishop, after the receipt of which the Archbishop had evidently tried to quiet matters. Thus Sir Hardolph remarks, "Your Grace is pleased to take notice in the close of your letter that you have no authority in Trinity College[1]," and reminds him of his action in 1716, when Chicheley was appointed, and then presses the claims of his nephew "as a proper person for the place." At the end of the letter is the following postscript:—"I beg that your Grace will please to conceal the name of my Nephew, till y^r Grace has determined the affair in his favour[2]."

The reply of the Archbishop to the above is not forthcoming, but, as appears from Sir Hardolph's second letter [no. 9], dated Headon, 21 Sept. 1728, it bore the date Sept. 12. The second letter, after going over old ground, asks for a Mandate to the Master and Seniors to confer the post on his nephew (still unnamed). There is a postscript to this letter also. Sir Hardolph states that his nephew is with him at Headon, and has just received a letter from one of the Fellows of Trinity, who tells him that if the Archbishop will be so good as to give him

[1] See also Bentley Correspondence, p. 684.

[2] It seems strange that Sir Hardolph should be thus urgent for privacy, seeing that Colbatch and Parne had openly declared the name of their candidate in their petition.

the Mandate, it must be under the archiepiscopal seal, and that the Master and Seniors must admit him in three days after receiving it. He therefore suggests that the Mandate be sent to Headon, and his nephew shall then return to Cambridge. "It is the opinion of his friends there that if he got your Grace's Mandate before the Seniors meet (which will be the latter end of this month), they will never dispute it."

The Archbishop, who surely must have been heartily sick of the affair, in a letter to Dr Bentley (undated, but clearly written about the middle of October), tells him that he had sent "a Nomination[1]." This is referred to by Dr Bentley in his letter to the Archbishop of Oct. 20[2],—"Your Grace's nomination was delivered to me by Mr Parne and Mr Hutchinson last Wednesday afternoon." The Archbishop himself was clearly not anxious to fight for his own nomination, for in his subsequent letter of Dec. 10[3], he expresses himself as quite willing to leave the whole matter to the judgement of the Attorney-General.

We have seen that legal steps were taken, though not apparently till the following autumn, to force the College to submit, and we have already shewn the final outcome which was reached, doubtless through Bentley's ingenuity.

On 3 Nov. 1729, the College accepted Hutchinson as Stanhope Librarian, and he was admitted on Nov. 11. The form used on that occasion is unusual, and was evidently worded in the light of the Conclusion of Nov. 3:—"Sandys Hutchinson, juratus et admissus in Librarium super nominationem Reverendissimi in Christo Patris Archiepiscopi Cantuariensis secundum tenorem Testamenti Domini Edvardi Stanhope, Militis, hujusce Collegii aliquando Socii."

Thomas Bentley had resigned in June, 1729, yet in the Senior Bursar's book for the year ending Michaelmas, 1729, Bentley receives the whole year's stipend; in 1730 and following years Hutchinson's name appears alone, without Gossip's.

[1] Bentley Correspondence, p. 688.
[2] Ibid. p. 689.
[3] Ibid. p. 692.

Hutchinson was one of the four editors of Stephani Thesaurus Linguæ Latinæ, in four volumes folio; Cambridge, 1734. The other three were, the Rev. Edmund Law, M.A., Fellow of Christ's [afterwards Bishop of Carlisle], John Taylor, M.A., Fellow of St John's, and the Rev. Tho. Johnson, M.A., Fellow of Magdalene. At this time, at any rate, Hutchinson was not in Holy Orders[1].

It was during Hutchinson's Librarianship that the Library was robbed by Henry Justice. This unhappy man was a Fellow-Commoner of the College, and pleaded at his trial (March, 1736) that he was thereby a member of the Foundation, and as such could not be said to steal when he was himself part owner. Such a plea was of course quite inadmissible, and Justice was transported[2].

I do not know how Hutchinson's tenure of his office came to an end.

NOTE.

I give this note on a point of genealogy here, so as not to break the thread of the narrative. Although Sir Hardolph Wasteneys is so careful to abstain from mentioning the name, yet his nephew was of course Sandys Hutchinson, as is shewn by the simple fact that in the petition of Colbatch and Parne, which he forwards to the Archbishop, Sandys Hutchinson is definitely named.

In Burke's Extinct and Dormant Baronetcies, it is stated[3] that Sir Edward Wasteneys, the third baronet [ob. 1678], married Catherine Sandys, the great grand-daughter of Edwin Sandys, Archbishop of York. They had two children, a son, afterwards Sir Hardolph Wasteneys [ob. 1742], with whom the title became extinct, and a daughter, Catherine, who married Edward, the son of Samuel Hutchinson, of Boston, Lincolnshire.

[1] For remarks on this edition, see Nichols, Lit. Anecd. ii. 65, iv. 494, v. 176.

It is added that the only child of this marriage was a daughter and heiress.

It seems clear, however, that Sandys Hutchinson must also have been a child of this last marriage, for if Burke were correct, Sir Hardolph Wasteneys would not have had a nephew at all. Moreover, Sandys Hutchinson too was the son of an Edward Hutchinson of Boston, and his Christian name is the same as the maiden name of Catherine Hutchinson's (née Wasteneys) mother.

(XVII.) Timothy Lee. [1740–1742.]

Timothy Lee[1] was the son of William Lee, of Pontefract, Yorkshire, and was educated at Westminster School under Dr Friend[2].

At the age of 18, he was entered at Trinity as pensioner, 6 Dec. 1732, under Dr Smith. He was admitted Scholar 20 April, 1733; and took the degrees of B.A. 173⅝, M.A. 1740, and D.D. 1752. He also incorporated M.A. at Oxford, 30 July, 1741[3].

He appears to have only narrowly missed a Fellowship. In a letter from Thomas Goodwin[4] to Samuel Jebb, both of Trinity College, it is remarked, "Yesterday came on the Election for fellowships, when there were seven Vacancies and nine Candidates: one of ye persons y^t were thrown out was Leigh [this must be Timothy Lee], ye other you don't know." Goodwin then sends greeting from Mr Leigh, who "is just recovered of a

[1] An earlier Timothy Lee, born 18 Dec., 1659, possibly the grandfather of the above, was admitted at Merchant Taylors' School in 1673. (Robinson, p. 281.)

[2] The name does not occur in the Alumni Westmonasterienses, which seemed to me puzzling in the case of one who in due time became a Scholar of Trinity. Dr Rutherford, the Head Master of Westminster, kindly gives me the explanation:—"Apparently there was some reason why he should not be in College at Westminster. He may have been over age or under age, or delicate, or the like; and at that time the Scholarships at Trinity and the Studentships at Christ Church were not open to town-boys."

[4] Goodwin was afterwards Fellow; B.A. 174⅝, M.A. 1744. Jebb did not proceed to a degree.

fit of sickness." Cambridge seems to have been visited by "a very malignant Distemper" in the preceding summer[1].

He was elected Librarian, 14 July, 1740, and admitted the same day. The cause which had led to the vacancy is not stated.

As will be seen, he vacated the Librarianship by accepting a living. He married Penelope, daughter of Sir William Chester, bart., and widow of John Price, of Covent Garden, surgeon. She was one of the co-heirs of Sir Henry Wood, to property in Suffolk[2].

Mr Lee became Vicar of Pontefract in 1742, Vicar of Felkirk, near Barnsley, in 1743, and Rector of Ackworth, near Pontefract, in 1744. He died at the age of 63, at Ackworth, 19 April, 1777, and was buried there, but no tombstone or tablet to him is known there. His wife had died at Ackworth, in 1762, of consumption and was buried there.

My cordial thanks are due to the Rev. J. H. Littlewood, Vicar of Felkirk, and the Rev. H. Howlett, Rector of Ackworth, for the information they have kindly given me. Mr Howlett has written for the "Ackworth Parochial Magazine" a series of papers on the "Antiquities of Ackworth," and has sent me copies of those which refer to Dr Lee and his relations to the parish. Parts of these, in a condensed form, I subjoin. Dr Lee was evidently a man of great energy, and varied parts. It is recorded of him that he kept a pack of hounds for the amusement of his parishioners, and it is not at all improbable that he shared in the amusement himself. He employed an expert to make a transcript of all the Parish Registers, from the earliest date to his own time, and also to make fair copies of the ancient and half illegible deeds contained in the Parish Chest, relating to the charities and other matters of local interest.

He assisted in the consolidation of the various charities now grouped under the head of the "Poor's Estate." The greatest work, however, carried out under his auspices was the enclosure of the parish by a private Act of Parliament, passed in the year 1774, by which definite portions of land were assigned to the various freeholders, in lieu of the "Common Rights" hitherto enjoyed by them. Dr Lee considerably improved the method of keeping the Parish Registers, and in the case of Burials was in the habit of recording the cause of death. In reference to this, Mr Howlett calls attention to the terrible havoc wrought in the parish a hundred and fifty years ago by small-pox, and contrasts this with the comparatively rare presence of the disease there of recent years.

During the Rectorship of Dr Lee, a Foundling Hospital was established at Ackworth, on land bought in 1757 by the governors of the London Foundling Hospital from Sir John Ramsden and others. The intention was to found a branch institution, where the weaker children might be benefited by country air, and where there would also be increased facilities for apprenticing the children. For a time the children were lodged in a farm-house, but ultimately extensive buildings were erected, which now form the Friends' School. Dr Lee was one of the foremost and most energetic members of the Hospital Committee and it was he who designed the centre and principal building. The water supply was planned and worked out by Smeaton, who built the Eddystone Lighthouse. The total cost of the building was £12,000, a much larger sum of course in those days than at present. The Hospital remained at Ackworth from 1757 to 1773, when, owing to the withdrawal of a Parliamentary grant, this and two other branches had to be given up. A work on the history of the school, which took the place of the Hospital (The History of Ackworth School, by Henry Thompson, of Arnside), to which Mr Howlett acknowledges his obligations, but which I have not succeeded in seeing, says of Dr Lee's services to the Hospital:—"While speaking of the general success of the Institution, it would be a mistake to omit reference to Timothy Lee, D.D., to whom so much of that success, if not absolutely due, was much indebted. He was a gentleman who placed an intelligent and philanthropic mind almost entirely at the service of the young institution; and living within sound of its clock bell, was ever able to be at the place, at important and critical moments, unstintingly lavishing time and love upon its welfare."

It is worth adding that a special caravan was constructed to carry the children and their nurses from London to Ackworth by the Great North Road, the journey occupying in fine weather six or seven days; and that "Dr Lee invented an ingenious kind of hammock, which was slung inside the caravan, in which the little ones could sleep at night."

Strong evidence of the esteem in which Dr Lee was held in his parish is furnished by the following statement, written on the back of his portrait, which now hangs in Ackworth Rectory:—

"Timothy Lee, S.T.P., was presented to the Rectory of Ackworth, December, 1744. He died there April 19, 1777, aged 63, universally lamented, as before he had been beloved and honoured by his Parishioners.

"This portrait, painted by the elder Kellingbeck, of Pontefract, a few years before Dr Lee's death, and esteemed to be a strong likeness, is presented by one of his successors to the Rector and Churchwardens of Ackworth for the time being, for the use of the Parish, in the hope that it may be allowed to remain in the Rectory House, as a mark of respect to the memory of the original."

Mr Howlett has most kindly had the portrait photographed for me. Dr Lee is represented in gown and bands, and the face is a most striking combination of geniality and shrewdness.

As far as appears, Dr Lee had no children of his own, but a mural tablet in Ackworth Church, to the memory of his step-daughter and her husband, contains the only reference to Dr Lee known to Mr Howlett in or about the Church. It seems strange that neither the step-daughter, who left a charity to the Parish, nor the parishioners, should have raised some monument to one so "universally lamented."

The tablet runs as follows:—"Sacred to the Memory of Anthony Surtees, Esq., one of His Majesty's Justices of the Peace for the West Riding of Yorkshire, and many years Lieut. Col. of the 2nd West York Regiment of Militia. He died 12th January, 1807, aged 65. Also of his wife Frances Dorothea Surtees, who died 27th of March, 1802, aged 64. She was the daughter of Penelope, the wife of John Price, Esq., who afterwards married Timothy Lee, D.D. and Rector of this Parish."

(XVIII.) Thomas White. [1742–1763.]

Thomas White was the son of Richard White, of Wakefield, was educated at Wakefield School, under Mr [Benjamin] Wilson[1], and was entered as sub-sizar at Trinity, under Mr [John] Wilson, on 21 March, 173⅞, being then 19 years of age. He was a Storie Exhibitioner from Wakefield School in 1740[2].

He was admitted Scholar, 10 April, 1741; and took the degrees of B.A. 174½, and M.A. 1745. He was elected Librarian, 30 Dec. 1742, "on the cession of Mr Lee," and was admitted the same day.

He held the Librarianship till his death[3], 30 Aug. 1763. He had taken Holy Orders[4].

I have no details to mention as to Mr White's long tenure of office of twenty-one years. The only notice of him which I can find shews anyhow that it was not an inactive one. A Conclusion of 15 Dec. 1767 runs, "ordered by the Master and Seniors that the Senior Bursar pay the late Mr White's Executrix seventy pounds for six Folio Volumes, containing part of a new Catalogue of the Books in the College Library."

(XIX.) Thomas Green. [1763–1788.]

Thomas Green was the son of Thomas Green, of Wimeswould (Wymeswould), Leicestershire, and was educated at Loughborough School under Mr Parkinson.

At the age of 18, he was admitted as sizar at Trinity,

It has been thought by some that Goldsmith's portrait of Dr Primrose is drawn from the Rev. Benjamin Wilson (Peacock l.c.). Mr John Wilson was his younger brother.

11 June, 1756, under Mr Whisson[1]. He was admitted Scholar, 11 May, 1759, and took the degrees of B.A. 1760, and M.A. 1763. He was elected Librarian 12 Sept. 1763, and was admitted the same day. The Conclusion recording his election states that the post had become vacant through the death of Mr White.

He was elected Professor of Geology by the Senate, 7 May, 1778[2], and retained both the Librarianship and the Professorship till his death, which took place at Cambridge, 9 June, 1788[3], when he was fifty years of age. He had taken Holy Orders[4]. He was buried at St Michael's on June 11[5].

A contemporary account states that in the autumn before his death he had been deprived of the use of one side by a paralytic stroke, while shooting in Huntingdonshire; and he was with difficulty brought home to College. He was thence sent to Bath, but "found no relief from its waters." The writer adds, "His goodness of disposition and his botanical knowledge, made him regretted by all who knew him[6]."

With regard to his Professorship, it is stated in the Cambridge Calendar for 1820, in a notice, believed from the style to be Professor Sedgwick's, that Professor Green "added some valuable organic remains to the Woodwardian cabinets[7]."

(XX.) John Clark. [1788–1803.]

John Clark was the son of John Clark, of London, and was educated at Petersfield School, Hants., under Mr Street. He was entered at Trinity as sizar, 3 June, 1780, under Mr Collier[8], being then twenty years of age. He was admitted Scholar,

2 May, 1783. He took the degrees of B.A. (as 4th Senior Optime) in 1784, and M.A. in 1788. He was elected Librarian, 23 June, 1788, and was admitted the same day.

In one of Porson's letters to Hailstone, dated 23 Feb. 1790, he sends a jocular message to Mr Clark:—"Please to tell the Right Rev[d] the librarian that I have got a copy of the new Edition of Toup's critical works, published at Oxford, which copy is at the library's service, if it chuses to accept it[1]." I suppose from this that Mr Clark was in Holy Orders, but I have no other evidence.

He held the Librarianship till his death, as is shewn by the Conclusion recording the appointment of his successor.

(XXI.) Charles Hoyle. [1803–1804.]

Charles Hoyle was the son of Robert Hoyle, of Halifax, and was educated at Hipperholme School, near Halifax, under Mr Hudson. At the age of sixteen he was entered at Trinity, 11 July, 1789, as pensioner, under Mr Jones[2]. He was admitted Scholar, 20 April, 1792; and took the degrees of B.A. 1794, and M.A. 1797. He won the Seatonian Prize in 1804 and 1806. He was elected Librarian, 31 May, 1803, and was admitted on August 16.

The biographer of the Rev. Legh Richmond, who had taken his degree from Trinity in the same year with Mr Hoyle, states that an early (unnamed) friend had reported that Mr Richmond's "first attempt to preach ex tempore in the very small church of Yaverland, in the Isle of Wight, was a total failure." Much ashamed, he declared that he would not try again, but did so on the "urgent solicitation of our common friend, the Rev. Charles Hoyle," and was most successful afterwards[3].

In 1812, Mr Hoyle was presented by the Duke of Marlborough, whose domestic Chaplain he was, to the Vicarage of Overton in Wiltshire, and retained it till his death. He died at Overton, and is buried in the churchyard there. The inscription on the head-stone runs, "In remembrance of the Rev[d] Charles Hoyle, 36 years vicar of this parish, who died the 15th day of November, 1848, aged 76 years[1]."

Mr Hoyle published the following works:—

1. Moses viewing the Promised Land. Camb., 1804. [Seatonian Prize Poem.]

2. Paul and Barnabas at Lystra. Camb., 1806. [Seatonian Prize Poem.]

3. Exodus, an Epic Poem in Thirteen Books. London, 1807.

This is dedicated to the Duke of Marlborough, whose domestic Chaplain Mr Hoyle then was.

4. Three Days at Killarney, with other Poems[2]. London, 1828.

5. The Pilgrim of the Hebrides; a lay of the North Countrie. By the author of Three Days at Killarney[3]. London, 1830.

6. Exodus, or the Curse of Egypt, a Poem[4].

To these may be added,

7. A Sermon [on Matt. xvi. 18] preached at...Marlborough...at the Visitation of the...Bishop of Salisbury. Bristol, 1823 [Brit. Mus.].

In no. 4, the influence of Sir Walter Scott's Lord of the Isles and Lady of the Lake is very prominently marked.

(XXII.) Aldous Edward Henshaw. [1804–1837.]

Aldous Edward Henshaw was the son of Edward Henshaw, of Cambridge, and was educated at Linton School, Cambs., under Mr Lodge. He was entered at Trinity, as sizar, under Mr Jones, 6 July, 1798, being then 17 years of age.

He was admitted Scholar, 22 April, 1803, and took the degrees of B.A. in 1804, and M.A. in 1807. He was elected Librarian 14 Dec., 1804, and admitted Dec. 16.

[4] Whether this is a later edition of no. 3, or an independent poem, I do not know. I take it from the London Catalogue of Books published in the years 1816—1831.

He took Holy Orders, and was "for many years officiating minister at Bottisham, Cambs." He died 13 Dec., 1837, "at the South-sea-house," aged 56[1].

(XXIII.) CHARLES WARREN. [1837–1840.]

Charles Warren was the third son of the Rev. Dawson Warren, M.A. [of Trinity College, Oxford; Vicar of Edmonton, 1796–1838], and was born at Edmonton, 16 Sept., 1808. He was educated at Hammersmith school, under Mr Railton; and was entered at Trinity under Mr Peacock (afterwards Dean of Ely), 19 March, 1827.

He rowed "three" in the first inter-university boat race in 1829, when the late Dean Merivale was "four," and the late Bishop Selwyn "of Lichfield and New Zealand" was "seven."

He was admitted Scholar 23 April, 1830, and took the degrees of B.A. 1831, and M.A. 1834.

He was ordained deacon, 29 April, 1832, and priest 28 April, 1833, by Bishop Marsh of Peterborough. He became curate of Burton-Latimer, Northants. (29 April, 1832), of Edmonton (30 May, 1834), and Perpetual Curate of St James, Enfield Highway (16 July, 1835).

On 26 Dec., 1837, he was elected to the Librarianship, vacant through the death of Mr Henshaw, and was admitted the same day. He held this post until it was vacated by his acceptance of the Vicarage of Over, on the Western borders of Cambridgeshire. Of this the College had been the patron since its foundation, but, in 1839, the presentation had somehow been allowed to lapse. A Conclusion of 2 Dec. 1839 agrees that "Mr Warren, now Librarian to the College, be recommended to the Bishop of Ely, for his Lordship's License to the sequestration of Over." The Bishop himself allowed the presentation to lapse to the Crown, and it was by the Crown that Mr Warren was actually presented. He was instituted 3 Sept. 1840. The Librarianship, however, had been vacated some months before this, for Mr James Ind Smith was elected on 12 March, 1840, "in the room of Mr Warren, now Vicar of Over." This last phrase, I presume, means that the living had been offered and accepted, though the formalities were delayed.

[1] Gentleman's Magazine, New Series, vol. ix. p. 215. He was of course not Vicar, for he could not have held a living with the Librarianship, but Curate, perhaps in sole charge. The living could be held with a fellowship: Mr Pugh was Vicar 1810—26, and Mr John Brown (for whom see Luard, u.s. p. 107) from 1826—37. Mr Henshaw also officiated at St Michael's, Cambridge, as we see from Dr Venn's edition of the Parish Register.

Mr Warren was in 1842 Proctor in Convocation for the Diocese of Ely. He resigned the living of Over in 1873, and resided for the latter part of his life in Cornwall. He died at Kenwyn, 17 Dec. 1883.

Mr Warren was the author of

1. Sermon for Enfield National School, 1837.
2. Indeterminateness of Unauthorised Baptism, 1841.
3. The Lord's Table the Christian Altar, 1842.
4. Address to Parishioners of Over on opening the National School, 1843.

He was the editor of

1. Synodalia, a Journal of Convocation, 1853.
2. The Journal of Convocation, 2 vols., 1855—8.

I have to return my cordial thanks to the Rev. C. F. S. Warren, M.A., of Southfields, Longford, Coventry, the only surviving son of Mr Warren, for his kindness in carefully revising my notes concerning his father, and adding a number of details previously unknown to me.

(XXIV.) JAMES IND SMITH. [1840–1845.]

James Ind Smith was the son of Mr John Smith, of Cambridge, who was University Printer from 1809 to 1836, and was educated at Hingham School, Norfolk, under Mr Browne. He was entered at Trinity College, 9 July, 1831, under Mr Peacock, being then 18 years of age. He was admitted Scholar, 19 April, 1833.

He was awarded the Browne Medal for the Greek and Latin Epigrams in 1834, and that for the Greek Ode in 1835; and the Members' Prize for the Latin Essay in 1835 and 1836. He took the degree of B.A. in 1836 (and was fifth in the First Class of the Classical Tripos), and M.A. in 1839.

He was ordained deacon in 1839, and priest in 1840 by the Bishop of Norwich (Stanley). He was elected Librarian in succession to Mr Warren, 12 March, 1840, and was admitted on July 7 following.

Like his predecessor, he vacated the Librarianship by the acceptance of a living, being presented by the College on 25 April, 1845, to the Vicarage of Marsworth, Bucks., then vacant by the resignation of the Rev. J. Weighall. This he retained till 1847, when on his resignation, the Rev. J. Biass Turner was (Nov. 1) appointed to succeed him.

Mr Smith married Ellen Frances, only daughter of John Temple, Esq., of Malton, Yorkshire. She died 16 Sept. 1887[1]. Mr Smith died 15 Nov. 1896, at Agra Villa, Belmont Hill, Lee, aged 83. He had endowed during his lifetime a pension in connection with the Printers' Pension Association.

(XXV.) George Brimley. [1845—1857.]

To the vacancy caused by Mr Smith's acceptance of a living, a new Librarian was appointed, whose name the posthumous publication of his volume of Essays has made familiar to a wide circle of readers.

George Brimley was the son of Mr Augustine Gutteridge Brimley, and was born at Cambridge, 29 Dec. 1819. From the age of eleven to that of sixteen, he was educated at a school at Totteridge, Herts.; and for the next two years he read privately with the Rev. Charles Clayton, Fellow of Caius College. On 5 Feb. 1838, he was entered at Trinity under Mr Whewell (afterwards Master), subsequently passing under Mr J. W. Blakesley (afterwards Dean of Lincoln), on Mr Whewell's resignation of the Tutorship.

He commenced residence in October, 1838, and was admitted Scholar, 23 April, 1841. He read for the Classical Tripos, first under the guidance of the Rev. C. J. Vaughan (then Fellow of the College, afterwards Head Master of Harrow and now Dean of Llandaff) and afterwards with the Rev. Henry Thompson, Fellow of St John's College.

Even at this early period, the malady which ultimately proved fatal had so weakened his constitution, that his chances of success in a competition for honours were seriously affected.

I am informed, moreover, that Mr Brimley had no taste for Mathematics, and this fact had doubtless not a little to do with his not seeking a degree in honours. It will be remembered that it was necessary at that time and for some years afterwards to pass in the Mathematical Tripos as a condition to being allowed to compete in the Classical Tripos.

On the issue of the degree list for 1842, Mr Brimley's name stood 17th in order among those who were not candidates for Honours[1]. He took his B.A. degree in 1842, and M.A. in 1845. During the three intervening years, he took, with considerable success, a large number of private pupils to prepare for College and University examinations, while continuing his studies with a view to the Fellowship Examination.

Though he competed twice unsuccessfully, his work impressed the Examiners as being exceedingly good. Through the kindness of Mrs Robert Bowes, Mr Brimley's only surviving sister, I have been permitted to read the testimonials sent in by Mr Brimley on the occasion of a candidature to be presently mentioned. In the general testimonial from the Master and Fellows of Trinity it is remarked that though he was "not elected [Fellow] he impressed the Examiners with a very high idea of his classical attainments and of the elegance of his style of translation." Among individual testimonials from Senior Fellows who had examined Mr Brimley in the Fellowship Examination, Mr Blakesley remarks that he "only just failed to get a Fellowship, and no doubt but for his frequent illnesses he would have got one." Mr J. M. Heath says, "had his Mathematical knowledge been greater than it is, I have little doubt that he would have been successful."

Early in 1845, Mr Brimley was a candidate for the Rectorship of the Ayr Academy and went down on a visit of inspection to Ayr. I have already referred to some of the testimonials sent in connection with this. In addition to these, there are a large number of others all couched in very warm terms. Besides signing the college testimonial, Dr Whewell, then Master, writes a further very cordial little note. Mr Romilly speaks of his "great range of reading coupled with remarkable accuracy." Among others who write are Mr C. J. Vaughan, Mr Carus, and the writer's dear old friend, the late Mr C. W. King.

From a letter which I have been privileged to see, written by Mr Brimley to his father during his visit to Ayr, I gather that while in many ways the post seemed attractive, yet the nature of the work and the conditions of the post were such as did not sufficiently commend themselves to him. It was rather a shock to him, too, with his ideas of English public schools, to find that the Ayr Academy was a mixed school for boys and girls. It would appear that after consultation with his friends at Cambridge he withdrew from his candidature. It cannot be doubted that his health could not long have stood the strain of a schoolmaster's life, and moreover that his literary tastes had a far freer scope amid the comparative leisure of a college life.

He was elected Librarian, 4 June, 1845, and was admitted the same day. From this time forward, the College became his home. He lived in rooms on the corner staircase of the Great Court, by the Master's Lodge, which adjoined the older Library of the College, and indeed had perhaps once formed part of it.

Although Mr Brimley's delicate health stood in the way of his attempting any larger work, such as mental powers like his would naturally have undertaken had bodily strength allowed, still he was able to contribute a number of articles to various literary journals. At a very early period in his career he had written papers for the Cambridge University Magazine (1840–3), among these being articles on "Living Dramatists of England," "Poetry, its nature and effect," etc.; while during the later years of his life he wrote regularly for the Spectator and occasionally for Fraser's Magazine.

All these were published anonymously, the only signed work being, I believe, the long article on Tennyson's Poems, which appeared in the Cambridge Essays for 1855, and is apparently the most elaborate piece of work which Mr Brimley left behind him.

His literary work was characterized by a high conscientiousness in the way of careful study of the books he was discussing. It both proved a solace to him in his gradually weakening condition and was the means of bringing him into intimate relations with some of the foremost literary men of the day. Among them was the late Charles Kingsley. In the possession of Mr and Mrs Robert Bowes are a large number of Kingsley's letters, testifying to a warm and intimate friendship between the two men.

Two of these letters are printed in the Letters and Memories of Charles Kingsley, edited by his widow[1]. They refer to some correspondence in the Spectator on the state of the Universities, and to Kingsley's belief that "there was a wide-spreading spirit of unbelief among the undergraduates." The second letter thanks Mr Brimley warmly for his "gallant letter" in the Spectator.

With Mr F. D. Maurice, too, Mr Brimley was on terms of very warm friendship, and a large number of letters from Mr Maurice to his friend have been preserved.

I am informed that Mr Brimley's most intimate friend, outside the circle of his own family, was certainly the late Mr W. G. Clark, to whose work for his friend I refer subsequently. Mr Clark was with him a few days before his death.

The late Dr Hort was one of Mr Brimley's most intimate friends. In the recently published biography of the former by Mr A. F. Hort, the writer remarks that his father "saw much of George Brimley, whose acute intellect he warmly appreciated," and mentions Brimley's name in the very distinguished body of guests at Hort's "Fellowship dinner[1]." Dr Hort refers to Mr Brimley's Essay on Tennyson to which I have already alluded, in a letter to the Rev. J. Ellerton. He says of the volume of Cambridge Essays, "The gem of it is Brimley's Article on Tennyson, a genuine burst of hearty enthusiasm, ludicrously at variance with all dear Brimley's pet theories (he now professes to believe in nothing but 'nervous tissue'!) and except in one or two groundless cavils, a worthy vindication against the populace[2]."

Another friend with whom Mr Brimley was much thrown was the late Sir Arthur Helps, through their common friendship with Mr J. W. Parker, the publisher.

Amid steadily increasing weakness, but with every solace that the devoted care of his friends could bestow, the last few years of Mr Brimley's life were passed. He died on 29 May, 1857, at his father's house, 13 Park Terrace, and was buried in the Cambridge Cemetery. At the foot of the granite cross above his grave is inscribed the text "Mercy and Truth are met together."

[1] Life and Letters of F. J. A. Hort, vol. i. pp. 173—4.
[2] Ibid. 320.

In the following year a collection of his Essays was brought out by the late Mr W. G. Clark, then Fellow and Tutor of Trinity, with a short, warmly appreciative memoir. He concludes with a touching tribute from an unnamed friend, who, I am informed, was Sir Arthur Helps:—"I believe he was an unusually good man, whose goodness was not always prominent to the ordinary observer, but who was intrinsically faithful, true, brave, and affectionate....His death is really a loss to literature. He was certainly, as it appeared to me, one of the finest critics of the present day. We shall not soon meet with his like again."

The portrait prefixed to the volume is a steel engraving by E. Radcliffe from a photograph by Mayall, taken in 1856. It represents a strong intellectual face and withal a pleasant and kindly one. The family possess also a portrait of Mr Brimley as a young man, painted by Isaac Robert [?] Cruikshank about 1844, and a chalk drawing by A. Ludovici taken about 1850.

There is an error in the life of Mr Brimley in the Dictionary of National Biography[1], which states that he retained the Librarianship "until a few weeks before his death." He was Librarian until his death, as is shewn by the Conclusion which records the election of his successor. The error is doubtless due to the fact that the last six months of his life were passed not in his college rooms, but at home.

I have to return my best thanks to my friend Mr Bowes for his kind aid in making this notice as accurate as possible.

(XXVI.) Howard Warburton Elphinstone. [1857—1858.]

To the vacancy caused by the death of Mr Brimley, Mr Howard Warburton Elphinstone was elected.

The new Librarian was the only son of Sir Howard Elphinstone, Bart., was born at Westminster in 1830, and was educated at Eton under Dr Hawtrey.

He was entered at Trinity under Mr (afterwards Archdeacon) Cooper, 4 Feb. 1850, and was admitted Scholar, 9 April, 1853.

[1] Vol. vi., p. 344.

He took the degrees of B.A. (as 17th Wrangler) in 1854, and M.A. in 1857. He was elected Librarian, 9 June, 1857, and was admitted the following day.

He resigned the Librarianship in the following year, and his successor, Mr John Glover, was appointed on 13 Dec. 1858.

Mr Elphinstone was called to the Bar at Lincoln's Inn in 1862. He was formerly Professor and afterwards Reader of the Law of Real and Personal Property to the Inns of Court. He was appointed Conveyancing Counsel to the Court, Nov. 1895. He succeeded his father as third baronet in 1893.

He is author of

1. A Practical Introduction to Conveyancing, 1871.
   Second edition, 1881.
   Third edition, revised, 1884.
   Fourth edition, 1894.
2. [Jointly with Mr T. Key.] A Compendium of Precedents in Conveyancing, 1878.

(XXVII.) JOHN GLOVER. [1858—1863.]

John Glover was the son of an officer in the army, John Octavius Glover, who served in the First Royals, and retired from the service as Lieutenant-Colonel. He was born at Waterford, 23 Dec. 1823, and was educated privately in Devonshire.

He was entered at Trinity under Mr Blakesley (afterwards Dean of Lincoln), on 28 June, 1842. He was admitted Scholar, 19 April, 1844, and took the degrees of B.A. (as 18th Wrangler, and 2nd in the Second Class of the Classical Tripos) in 1846 and M.A. in 1849.

He was ordained deacon by the Bishop of Winchester (Sumner) in 1849, and priest by the Bishop of Cork (Wilson) in 1850. He was admitted Chaplain of the College on 29 Oct. 1851, and on 13 Dec. 1858 was elected Librarian on Mr Elphinstone's resignation, and was admitted the same day. He was the last who was sworn on admission; after Mr Glover's admission, the old "juratus et admissus" becomes "professione facta admissus." The Seniority on 4 March, 1859, allowed Mr Glover to hold his Chaplaincy during a year of Grace.

The Vicarage of Brading, in the Isle of Wight, having become vacant, Mr Glover was presented to it by the college, 1 Dec. 1862. The preliminary formalities evidently took some time, for not till 25 March, 1863, was the vacancy caused by Mr Glover's acceptance of Brading filled up by the election of Mr W. A. Wright.

Mr Glover died on 5 July, 1884, at the house of his brother, the Rev. George Glover, Vicar of Bourton, Dorset, and is buried in the cemetery at Bourton.

Mr Glover was one of the compilers of the Catalogue of the MSS. in the Library of the University of Cambridge. His name occurs in vol. I. (1856) as undertaking the scientific and medical MSS., conjointly with Dr Webster of Jesus College. In vols. II. (1857), III. (1858) and IV. (1861) Mr Glover undertook this work alone. In vols. III. and IV. he also took part of the work on the Historical MSS. conjointly with Mr Luard and Mr Ventris.

During this work at the University Library he formed a friendship, which ended only with life, with Professor J. E. B. Mayor and the late Henry Bradshaw.

His name appears as joint editor with Mr W. G. Clark on the title-page of the first volume of the first edition of the Cambridge Shakespeare, 1863; but his departure from Cambridge rendered it impossible for him to continue the work of editing, and his place was taken by Mr W. A. Wright. While he was Vicar of Brading, he edited for the Rolls Series, "Le Livere de Reis de Brittanie, e Le Livre de Reis de Engletere," 1865.

I have to thank the Rev. Octavius Glover, B.D., Rector of Emmanuel Church, Loughborough, and formerly Fellow of Emmanuel College, for kindly revising and making some additions to the above details of his brother's life.

(XXVIII.) William Aldis Wright. [1863—1870.]

As I have already said, Mr Wright was appointed to fill the vacancy created by Mr Glover's acceptance of the Vicarage of Brading.

The new Librarian was the son of Mr George Wright, of Beccles in Suffolk, and was educated at the Grammar School there, under the Rev. H. N. Burrows. At the age of 19, he was entered at Trinity under Mr Thompson (afterwards Master), on 6 June, 1850.

He was admitted Scholar, 9 April, 1853; was 18th Wrangler in 1854, and took the degrees of B.A. in 1858 and M.A. in 1861. He was also created Hon. LL.D. at Edinburgh in April, 1879, Hon. D.C.L. at Oxford, 30 June, 1886, and Hon. Litt.D. at Dublin, 28 June, 1895.

He was elected Librarian, 25 March, 1863, and was admitted on May 28 following. He held the Librarianship till appointed Senior Bursar, 9 June, 1870, and held the latter office till December, 1895. He was admitted Fellow, 11 Oct. 1878 [sec. Stat. XXII.], and has been Vice-Master since 3 Feb. 1888.

(XXIX.) Sedley Taylor. [1870—1871.]

On Mr Wright's appointment as Senior Bursar he was succeeded as Librarian by Mr Sedley Taylor. The new Librarian was the son of Mr George Taylor, of Kingston, Surrey, and received his school education, first at Hofwyl under De Fellenberg, and afterwards at the school attached to University College, London. He subsequently attended lectures at that College, especially those of Professor De Morgan, and took the degree of B.A. at the University of London. At the age of 20, he was entered at Trinity under Mr Cooper, 8 Jan. 1855, and was admitted Scholar, 25 April, 1857. He took the degrees of B.A. (as 16th Wrangler) in 1859 and M.A. in 1862.

He was admitted Fellow, 11 Oct. 1861, and was elected and admitted Librarian, 9 June, 1870, but resigned the Librarianship in the May following in consequence of illness. Mr Taylor has published the following:

PREFACE.

WHEN this publication was first projected I had hopes that the portion of it relating to the buildings of the Nunnery would have been, wholly or in part, furnished by my friend, Mr T. D. Atkinson. Though Mr Atkinson's engagements have prevented him from taking so large a part in the work as was originally contemplated, I gratefully acknowledge the assistance he has throughout given me both in exploration of sites and buildings and in placing at my disposal his notes and suggestions.

The extent of my indebtedness to the Architectural History is, I hope, apparent in the section dealing with the Nunnery buildings. But my principal obligation to the Registrary is not of the kind that can be acknowledged in a footnote. Without his suggestion this work would never have been written; without the advantage of his counsel and knowledge it would have been much more imperfect than it is.

Among other friends who have given me valuable help are Prof. Maitland, Prof. Skeat, the Rev. J. H. Crosby, Minor Canon of Ely, and the Rev. O. Fisher, Honorary Fellow of Jesus College and Rector of Harlton.

The Catalogue of Charters here printed includes only such as relate to property situated in the town and fields of Cambridge. I have not deemed it worth while to give abstracts of those which are concerned with the scattered holdings of the Nuns in other places. The Catalogue remarkably supplements the very detailed information about medieval Cambridge which is supplied by the Hundred Rolls. Combining what is to be learnt from each source it would be no difficult task to make a very complete directory of the town in the last quarter of the 13th century. The witnesses to the Charters in most cases were the mayor and four bailiffs with two or three occupants of property adjoining the tenement in question. I have generally given the name of the first witness only.

Extracts of some length from the Account Rolls were given in the First Report of the Historical MSS. Commissioners: the accounts in full are here printed for the first time. They furnish some interesting materials for illustrating life in an English Nunnery at the close of the middle ages. In the earlier and more prosperous years to which they introduce us, it is a life wholly untinged by the influences of the University. The Nuns were drawn from the families of the better class burgesses and lesser gentry of the county, and their habits and education were those of their class. The town and its religious houses still occupied in their outlook a far larger space than the University. The 'good friendship' of the Chancellor—in a matter, perhaps, of arbitration with a College—was appropriately recompensed in the year 1449—1450 with a present of a crane, value twelve pence; it is set in quaint juxtaposition with the Christmas box to the Mayor's waits, who receive the magnificent sum of 2*s.* 3*d.* The proportion of the two sums is possibly an indication of the relative consequence in the Nuns' thoughts of the academic and municipal corporations, both of which, it may be observed, had an origin long subsequent to that of their own establishment.

On the debated subject of the date of the first emergence of a University at Cambridge the S. Radegund's charters throw no light. Among the variety of tenants mentioned in the deeds of the 12th and 13th centuries there is no individual or corporation whose name or description suggests connection with an organized community of scholars. The surnames of the tenants previous to 1300 indicate that they were almost exclusively from the neighbourhood of Cambridge. Of migrants from Oxford or scholars from over sea there is no hint; the Jews were the only strangers to Cambridge with whom the Nuns had acquaintance in those early days. A solitary 'Scolemayster' (Charters 157, 158), who dwelt hard by the site on which Peterhouse afterwards rose, represents the learning of Cambridge in the first years of the 13th century. Possibly he was connected with a monastic school.

Before taking leave of my subject I should not forget to mention two members of my College who have worked in the same field in generations by-gone. John Sherman's History of Jesus College (written about the year 1666) is introduced by a sketch of the History of the Nunnery which he entitles Reliquiae Sanctae Radegundis sive Fragmenta quaedam Historiae Prioratus. Sherman had made a faithful study of the Nunnery muniments. He is generally accurate and, as he may have had before him documents which are not now discoverable, it is possible that he is right in some matters about which I have supposed him to be mistaken. But I do not think that since his time there has been any noteworthy subtraction from the Jesus muniments. Well protected from damp, dust and insects, they have probably profited by the neglect in which they have generally lain for 200 years. About the middle of last century their repose was disturbed by the careful hands of Dr Lynford Caryl, who was Master of Jesus, 1758—1780, and Registrary of the University from 1751 to 1758. He arranged and catalogued them in a very exact and methodical manner. Among his merits not the least was that of writing in a very clear and beautiful hand. I have discovered some fifty charters of Nunnery date which escaped his notice, but none of them are of much importance. When the present Treasury was built in 1875 and the documents were transferred to it, some of them were misplaced, and for a time I supposed them to be lost. But gradually all, or nearly all, those mentioned in Dr Caryl's catalogue have found their way back to their places.

ANNALS OF THE NUNNERY.

§ 1. Foundation and connection with the See of Ely.

THE establishment, near Cambridge, of the cell of Benedictine nuns which was later known as the Priory of S. Mary and S. Radegund seems to date from the earliest years of the reign of King Stephen. There is no evidence to fix the precise year of its institution but it is fairly certain that it falls within the episcopate of Nigellus, who succeeded the first bishop, Hervey, in the see of Ely in 1133.

The Priory seems to have had no charter of foundation, nor is there any extant record of its first endowment. Such property as it possessed in early days was acquired gradually and in comparatively small parcels. Even the endowments which it derived from royal benefactors such as the Countess Constance and Malcolm of Scotland were not so important as to entitle the donors to be regarded in any sense as founders or patrons.

It is true that in the letters patent of Henry VII for the dissolution of the Nunnery and the erection of the College in its room it is asserted—evidently on the representation of Bishop Alcock—that S. Radegund's Priory was 'of the foundation and patronage of the Bishop, as in right of his cathedral church of Ely.' This was, I believe, the first and only occasion on which such a claim was advanced by a bishop of Ely, and, having regard to the circumstances under which it was made, I do not think that much importance should be attached to it. In the charter which the Lady Margaret obtained, a few years later, from Henry VII for the conversion of S. John's Hospital into the College of S. John it is similarly stated that the House or Priory of religious brethren of S. John the Evangelist in Cambridge was 'of the foundation and patronage of James (Stanley), Bishop of Ely, as in right of his cathedral church.' In this latter case the statement is historically inaccurate, for the founder of the Hospital was unquestionably Henry Frost, burgess of Cambridge, though Bishop Nigellus had been a liberal benefactor to it and the Hundred Rolls show that, as early as the reign of Henry III, Bishop Hugh de Norwold claimed, as patron, the right of nominating the master. As regards the Nunnery the full details supplied by the Ely Episcopal Registers show that in the election of their Prioress the Nuns exercised a free choice, unfettered by reference to the wishes of a patron and subject only to the approval of the Bishop of Ely as diocesan. The motive which prompted the Bishops to assert their questionable claim to the patronage of either establishment was perhaps a double one—to make it clear to the King and to the Pope that no private rights of patronage were invaded by the dissolution of an ancient religious house, and to acquire for the Bishops of Ely, as visitors of the new foundations, a guiding influence in the development of the University.

Though the Nunnery was not perhaps, in strictness, founded by a bishop of Ely it is clear that its origin and early growth was intimately connected with the see and particularly with Bishop Nigellus (1133–1169). It was he who endowed it with a portion of the site on which the Nuns' original 'cell' was raised; of the principal benefactions to the newly established house three were protected by his charters and it seems likely that they were procured by his influence. Geoffrey Ridel, who succeeded Nigellus in the bishopric in 1174, appropriated to the Nuns the rectory of All Saints in the Jewry, Cambridge, and the connection with the see of Ely was maintained by Bishop Eustace (1197–1220), who gave the Nuns additional lands adjoining the Priory and bestowed on them the rectory of S. Clement's.

§ 2. Early charters. Grant of Bishop Nigellus.

The earliest in date of the Nuns' charters now extant in the treasury of Jesus College is probably that of Bishop Nigellus, addressed 'to all barons and men of S. Etheldrytha, cleric or lay, French or English,' in which for a rent of twelve pence he grants 'to the Nuns of the cell lately established without the vill of Cantebruge' certain land adjoining land belonging to the same cell (Charters, 1). The position of the land given by the Bishop is not specified in the charter, but it is safe to assume that it adjoined the cell and was identical with the four acres which, according to the statement of the Hundred Rolls (Vol. 2, p. 358), were given to the Nuns by Nigellus and were next the ten acres given them by King Malcolm as a site for their church. It is likely that the rent reserved by the Bishop represented the full letting-value of the land, since for the adjoining ten acres Malcolm stipulated in his first charter for a rent of two shillings. At some later date, Nigellus, like Malcolm, acquitted the Nuns of payment of rent, for the Hundred Rolls state that the Bishop gave them the land in pure and perpetual alms and show that they paid no rent for any of the land which they occupied in the Priory precincts.

There is nothing in this charter of Nigellus which would warrant any definite conclusions as to its date. As the Bishop did not die until 1169 it is of course possible that it is of later date than Malcolm's grant, and that the land mentioned by the Bishop as adjoining that which he gave to the Nuns and as already in their tenure was in fact no other than Malcolm's ten acre plot. The evidence of the Hundred Rolls might be held to countenance this view, for they mention Malcolm's grant before that of Nigellus and in such a way as seems to imply that the jurors supposed the King's grant to be the earlier in date[1]. On the other hand the vagueness of the description of the Nunnery as a 'cell lately instituted' is more consistent with the view that the establishment was in an inchoate stage and had received no distinctive title or dedication. In the charters in which he confirms the endowments given by William le Moyne and Stephen de Scalers Nigellus gives the Nunnery the style, which after Malcolm's gift was the usual one, of 'the Church and Nuns of S. Mary and S. Radegund.'

§ 3. Grant of William le Moyne and Confirmation by King Stephen.

The earliest of the Nuns' charters which can be dated with any precision is one given them by King Stephen confirming to 'the Church and Nuns of S. Mary of Cantebr. the grant made to them by William Monachus, aurifaber, of two virgates of land and six acres of meadow with four cottars (cotariis) with their holding in Shelford, in alms, for the soul of King Henry and for the faithful in God' (Charters, 2*a*). This charter is tested by William Martel, the King's dapifer, who played so prominent a part on the King's side in the struggle with the Empress, and by Reginald de Warenne. It is undated, but the circumstance that it was given 'apud Mapertes halam in obsidione' enables us pretty definitely to assign it to the month of January 1138 and brings to light a historical fact, unnoticed by chroniclers, to which attention was first drawn by Mr Howlett in his edition of the Gesta Stephani for the Rolls Series (Chronicles of the Reigns of Stephen &c. Vol. 3). Mapertes hala is Meppershall, near Shefford, in Bedfordshire. King Stephen, as the anonymous writer of the Gesta Stephani records, kept the Christmas feast of 1137 at Dunstable, and then 'emensis festivis diebus Dominicae festivitatis' attacked Malcolm) quam quidem terram habent de dono Nigelli Elyensis Episcopi qui quidem Nigellus dedit eisdem in pura et perpetua elemosina. B. quondam Prior Elyensis et Conventus Elyensis Ecclesie dictam donacionem eisdem monialibus factam concesserunt et confirmaverunt.' The initial B. is apparently a mistake: Bentham's list in his History of Ely, pp. 215 foll., mentions no Prior of Ely before the date of the H. R. whose name began with B.

Bedford Castle, held by Milo de Beauchamp, who had refused the King's summons to surrender it. Milo's obstinate resistance compelled the King to turn the siege into a blockade, but the castle was surrendered apparently about the middle of January 1138, for by Feb. 2 the King had reached Northumberland, whither he had been called by an invasion of the Scotch. 'The chronicles mention no such event as a siege at Meppershall; but there exists at the present day, close to the church of this small Bedfordshire village, a high mound with a double line of outer ramparts answering in the clearest way to the type of the hastily-built, stockaded "castles" of this reign. Stephen, it thus appears, had to capture this outpost, perhaps during the siege of Bedford in 1138[1].'

The grant of William Monachus which is confirmed by Stephen's charter may have been made a year or two before 1138. King Henry I, whose soul it was designed to benefit, died Dec. 1135. The land to which the charter refers is situated in Great Shelford parish; it is still in the possession of Jesus College and known as 'the Nuns' lands.' The Domesday Survey of Cambridgeshire shows that it formed a portion of a larger estate consisting of three hides and valued at £5 annual rent. In the Confessor's time it had belonged to 'Herald Comes,' afterwards King Harold. After the Conquest it passed into the hands of King William, of whom, at the time of the Domesday Survey, it was held ad firmam by Peter de Valongies[2] who was apparently a kinsman of William Monachus, or le Moyne, as his family was otherwise known[3]. From a charter

[1] The Meppershall earthworks are marked in the Ordnance Map as 'The Hills.' Mr Seebohm, who gives a small plan of them in The English Village Community, p. 426, supposes them to be of Saxon origin, possibly a 'toot-hill.' Mr Howlett compares this charter of King Stephen with another, dated 1138, 'apud Goldintonam in obsidione Bedeford,' Goldington being a village a few miles from Bedford.

[2] This Peter de Valongies, or Valoines, is said to have been a nephew of the Conqueror, and was founder, circa 1104, of Binham Priory, Norfolk. A Peter de Selford was Prior of Binham in 1244.

[3] H. R. Vol. II. p. 545, 'Dicunt quod dominus Johannes le Moyne, antecessor dicte Agnetis de Walenc' dedit in puram et perpetuam elemosinam of Nicolas, son of William le Moyne, we gather that the Shelford land came to his father by free gift of King Henry I. Apparently it was bestowed on him in recognition of his services and skill as an aurifaber, for he held it by goldsmith's serjeanty, and at the date of the Hundred Rolls Inquisition the lady Agnes de Valence retained a large portion of the same estate by the singular service of making up and repairing the King's crown when required[1].

From the designation of the Nuns' establishment in Stephen's charter as 'Ecclesia et Sanctimoniales Sancte Marie de Cantebr.' it would seem that the original church which was served by the Nunnery during the first twenty years of its existence and either made way for or was incorporated in the building which rose on the site given by King Malcolm was dedicated to S. Mary only. After the foundation of the new church the charters use the fuller style of 'Nuns of S. Mary and S. Radegund.' But the church in strictness seems to have kept the older single dedication even after Malcolm's time, for, as late as 1285, a tenement in Radegund (i.e. Jesus) Lane is described in a deed as lying 'in the parish of the Blessed Mary of the Priory of S. Radegund.' The Priory apparently took its name from a chapel of S. Radegund which is mentioned in an early undated deed and which seems to have been in the portion of the church reserved to the use of the Nuns. Gradually the original dedication came to be forgotten, and in Monialibus Sancte Radegundis lx acras terre ad sustinendum j noneam imperpetuum.' Antecessor here perhaps means no more than 'predecessor in the title.' At the time of the Hundred Rolls Inquisition another John le Moyne, distinguished by the local agnomen, Atteasse (i.e. at the Ash), was a free tenant of the lady Agnes de Valence at Great Shelford.

[1] Red Book of the Exchequer (Rolls Series), Vol. II. p. 530, 'Willelmus Monachus, iij hidas in Selforde per serjanteriam aurifabriae.' H. R. Vol. II. p. 545, 'Domina Agnes de Walaunc' tenet j messuagium cum gardino continente iij acras et viij^{xx} acras terre et de prato vj acras et tenet de domino Rege in capite per sergantiam et non est geldabilis non debet sectam neque auxilium Vicecomiti nichil aliud reddit set erit ultra (?) Domesday affords several instances of royal grants of land to goldsmiths: see Freeman's Norman Conquest, Vol. IV. pp. 41, 85, on the subject.

later times both parish and Nunnery were commonly called S. Radegund's. Evidence of the earlier dedication is to be seen in the fact recorded in the Hundred Rolls that King Stephen granted by charter to the Nuns a fair lasting for two days, viz. the vigil and the feast of the Assumption of the Blessed Mary. Fairs, as is well known, originated in most cases in the gatherings of worshippers or pilgrims about sacred places, and especially in the neighbourhood of religious houses, and were held on the feast-day of the saint to whom the church or shrine was dedicated.

The grant of William Monachus was confirmed to the Nuns by Nigellus, but as the Bishop's charter (Charters, 2*b*) designates the Nunnery as dedicated to S. Mary and S. Radegund it would seem that it was not given until many years after the original grant. The long interval is accounted for by the outbreak of the civil war in 1139. Nigellus, from his active partizanship in the cause of the Empress, had little time to attend to the affairs of his diocese, from which he was absent with only brief intervals until his reconciliation with Stephen in 1144, and until the accession of Henry II he is said to have lived in retirement. His charter cannot be of much later date than 1160, in or about which year died William (of Laventon), the first archdeacon of Ely, whose name is among the witnesses, and it can scarcely be so early as 1157, the earliest date to which it is possible to assign Malcolm's first charter.

All the facts which are ascertainable about William Monachus show that his relations with the Bishop were of an intimate kind and point to the probability that the Bishop's influence contributed to procure his benefaction to the Nuns. The Historia Eliensis[1] reveals him to us as one of a group of men, lay and cleric, who formed a Bishop's party in opposition to the Ely monks, who favoured Stephen's side in the war and had special grounds for complaint against the Bishop for appropriating the funds of the convent and the treasures of S. Etheldreda's shrine to defray the expenses entailed by his opposition to the King. Richard of Ely, the writer of this portion of the Historia Eliensis, took the monastic side of the quarrel and dwells with particular satisfaction on the exemplary afflictions which overtook the Bishop and his confederates in the spoliation. But William Monachus, we are told, lived to make some amends for the sacrilege which is laid to his charge, and the picture of his end is touched with a kindlier hand. 'With axes, hammers and every implement of masonry he profanely assailed the shrine and with his own hand robbed it of its metal. But he lived to repent it bitterly. He, who had once been extraordinarily rich and had lacked for nothing, was reduced to such an extreme of poverty as not even to have the necessaries of life. At last, when he had lost all and knew not whither to turn himself, by urgent entreaty he prevailed on the Ely brethren to receive him into their order, and there with unceasing lamentation, tears, vigils and prayers deploring his guilt, he ended his days in a sincere penitence.' He was alive in 1153–4 when, along with Nigellus, he witnessed the charter of the Countess Constance.

In the lifetime of William Monachus, and at his request, his son Nicolas re-granted to the Nuns the land given them by his father, which in the deed is stated to consist of 55 acres, together with 1½ acre of meadow and one acre whereon to build barns and cattle-sheds; and he further promised five acres, for which they had petitioned, as soon as he could get them. The Nuns however seem not to have acquired undisputed possession of their property until Henry III, 31, when John le Moyne, in consequence of an assize trial at Cambridge, assigned to them in perpetual alms a portion of the estate consisting of 50 acres. The Hundred Rolls state that the Nuns' estate at Shelford consisted of 60 acres and was given to them by John le Moyne to maintain one nun for ever. In this statement from the facts above given it would appear that there is an error either in the Christian name of the donor or in the number of the acres given. Nor do I know how it is to be reconciled with a deed of Edward I, 29, in which Agnes de Valence, lady of Offaley and Bailluel[1], renounced the claim to place two nuns in the Priory, which she exercised in right of lands held of her by the Nuns in Great Shelford. Beyond ten acres held by annual service to the Bishops of Ely the only land at Shelford in the occupation of the Nuns was that derived originally from William Monachus.

§ 4. Grant of the Countess Constance.

The next in order of time of the Nunnery charters is that of the Countess Constance, widow of King Stephen's only son, Eustace of Boulogne. It grants to the Nuns in perpetual alms exemption from hagable and langable for all their lands within and without the Borough, whether already acquired or hereafter to be acquired, and also gives them all the fishing right and water belonging to the Borough as freely as they had been held by her husband and herself. The grant of the Countess is for the souls of her husband, Eustace, and Stephen's Queen, Maud, and for the good estate of King Stephen. Queen Maud died in May, 1152, Eustace in August, 1153, King Stephen in October, 1154. The charter therefore belongs to the period between the last two dates. Two undated charters confirm that of the Countess—the first given by King Stephen 'apud Cantebrig,' the other by Bishop Nigellus. In all three charters the Nuns are styled 'Sanctimoniales de Cantebrig,' without dedication.

Independently of their relation to the history of the Nunnery these charters have a special interest in connection with the subject of the firma burgi of Cambridge. Hagable, i.e. haga-gafol, a payment for a haw or messuage in a town, and langable, i.e. land-gafol, payment for land occupied by a burgess in the common fields, formed an important part of the customs (consuetudines) of the town. At the time of the [1] Philip of Valognes, Chamberlain of Scotland, had a grand-daughter, Lora, who married Henry de Balliol, a cousin of King John Balliol. Offaley is Offley, near Hitchin, a manor which once belonged to the Balliols of Barnard Castle. Bailleul, near Lille, was a fief of the same family.

Domesday Survey the town of Cambridge formed part of the royal demesne and its customs were farmed of the King by the sheriff. It is doubtfully asserted by Cooper[1] that the farm of the borough was granted to the burgesses, as the King's tenants in capite, by Henry I, they paying to him the same sum as the sheriff had been accustomed to render. If such a grant was actually made it seems to have terminated with the life of that King, and the concession of immunity from hagable and langable which Constance made to the Nuns clearly implies that in Stephen's reign the fee-farm belonged to her husband and herself. The alienation in perpetuity to the Nuns of a portion of the customs shows that the fee-farm had been granted to the heirs of Eustace and Constance as well as to themselves. There were however no children of the marriage, and in the early years of Henry II the borough was again in the King's possession and farmed by the sheriff. In 1185 it was granted to the burgesses at farm by Henry II and continued to be farmed by them in the reign of Richard I[2]. When the fee-farm of the borough was granted to the burgesses in perpetuity by King John in 1207 the rights acquired by the Nuns from Constance seem to have suffered some curtailment. The immunity from hagable for lands 'hereafter to be acquired' could hardly extend to property acquired subsequently to the transfer of the hagable rental to the burgesses, and it is therefore not surprising to find from the Great Inquisition of Edward I in 1278 and the Nuns' accounts in 1449–50 and 1481–2 that they were then charged with certain hagable rents. Moreover King John's charter expressly included among the appurtenances of the Burgus 'mills, pools and waters[3],' and it is certain that at the date of the Hundred Rolls Inquisition the Nuns had no exclusive rights in the river waters, for the jurors affirmed that the burgesses then had a common piscaria in the common waters belonging to the vill of Cambridge. Nevertheless the charter of Constance was not inoperative, for it is rehearsed and confirmed in a charter of Edward II, dated in the seventh year of his reign (Charters, 8). The fishing rights claimed by the Nuns seem however to have been limited to a certain portion of the river, beyond the limits of the old borough, which as late as 1505 was known as Nunneslake. A sixteenth century list of the Nuns' muniments describes the charter of Edward II, above mentioned, as 'a grant of ye fishinge alonge by Jesus Greene.' In 1505 it was decided that the fishing in Nunneslake belonged to the town.

It is probable that the fee-farm of Cambridge was held by Constance in right of dower. Cambridge was among the towns usually assigned in dower to the Queens of England and other ladies of the royal family[1]. Queen Catharine, consort of Charles II, was the last English Queen who held the fee-farm of Cambridge. Except in the case of Constance the settlement seems always to have been for life. King Stephen had endeavoured to get his son Eustace crowned in 1152, and, though he failed in this purpose, Constance is said in after times to have borne the title of Queen[2]. The title Venerabilis given to her in the charter of Nigellus is probably a quasi-recognition of her claim to be regarded as Queen. It was applied to French kings (v. Ducange, s.v.) and more especially (with the variant Veneranda) to queens of the Norman period: e.g. Sarum Charters (Rolls Series) p. 17, 'Adelizae venerandae et illustris Angliae reginae cancellarius.'

§ 5. First Charter of King Malcolm IV. The Grenecroft site.

The first charter of King Malcolm IV, which is the next in order of date, is addressed "to all his men cleric and lay of the Honour of Huntedon" and gives to the Nuns of Grantebrige ten acres of land next Grenecroft in alms and to found (ad fundendam) thereon their church; it reserves to the King a rent of two shillings, which his minister is directed to offer at the altar of the same church. The charter is dated 'apud Hunted' and still has attached to it in white wax the royal seal bearing on the obverse side the figure of a king enthroned, on the reverse a mounted warrior. The Honour, or earldom, of Huntingdon which included the county of Cambridge was conferred on Malcolm in the latter half of 1157. Among the witnesses is Herbert, Bishop of Glasgow, who died 1164. Sherman in his MS. Historia Collegii Jesu (written temp. Charles II) states that among the College archives he had seen a charter of Theobald, Archbishop of Canterbury, confirming Malcolm's grant. No such charter is now extant nor is it included in the oldest registers of the Nunnery deeds, though as these early registers (written temp. Queen Elizabeth) are by no means complete the fact that it is not contained in them must not be taken as conclusive that it did not then exist. Sherman possibly had in mind an inspeximus of Archbishop Stephen Langton (Charters, 4*d*) which confirms charters of Theobald, Becket and Nigellus, though it does not connect them with Malcolm's gift. But as Becket's charter, which is still extant, mentions 'in particular (nominatim) the King of Scotland's grant' Sherman was in any case probably right in assuming that Theobald's referred to the same matter. As Theobald died in 1161 the years 1157–1161 mark the limits within which it is possible to date Malcolm's charter.

There is no extant charter of Nigellus confirming Malcolm's benefaction, but the charter of Thomas Becket above referred to is still in the College treasury. It was apparently written in the lifetime of Malcolm, for he is mentioned in it merely as 'Rex Scocie,' without name. Its date therefore falls between 1162, when Becket became archbishop, and 1165, the year of Malcolm's death. It pretty certainly refers to Malcolm's earlier charter for in it the Nuns are described simply as 'Sanctimoniales de Cantebrug[1].'

[1] Becket's charter is witnessed by Robert, Archdeacon of Oxford (i.e. Becket's friend, Rob. Foliot, afterwards Bishop of Hereford), Philipp' de Caun (i.e. of Calne, Becket's manciple and co-exul in 1165–6), Herbert de Boseham

This charter of Malcolm is the earliest which specifies the position of the Nunnery as being 'next Grenecroft,' though the probability is that it had been established there from the first. Grenecroft, now generally called Midsummer Common, lies wholly within the parish of S. Andrew, Barnwell, and outside the limits of the original borough of Cambridge, whence we find the Nunnery frequently described as being 'near' or 'without' the borough. In part at least it consisted of marsh land and from the earliest historical times it appears to have been the common pasture land of the townsmen of Cambridge. The district which bounded it on its western side, in S. Clement's parish, went by the name of Hulmus, 'the holm,' or island; its eastern extremity towards Barnwell Priory was called Estenhale. On its southern side it was skirted by the higher ground traversed by the road entering Cambridge, from the direction of Bury S. Edmund's, which at different points of its course was known as Barnwell Causey and Radegund's or Nuns' Lane. The ground occupied by the Nunnery and its precincts, called Nunnescroft, had for its boundaries the road, the common and the King's Ditch. A portion of it adjoining the angle made by Jesus Lane with Park St. was anciently known as Eldestedecroft, a name which occurs in deeds as late as the 16th century. Though the Nunnery was outside the borough limits it is never described as being in Barnwell. The Nuns were sometimes called 'Nuns of Grenecroft' but there is no direct evidence to show that the sites given by Nigellus and Malcolm had formed a portion of the common land. But there is at least a likelihood that they had been obtained by encroachment on the pasture land of Grenecroft. Both S. John's Hospital and Barnwell Priory were built on common land[1].

(Becket's well-known friend and biographer), and Robert and William, chaplains (probably Becket's chaplains, Robert of Merton and William Fitz-Stephen, who were with him at the time of his murder; the latter wrote a biography of Becket). § 6. Second Charter of King Malcolm IV. Dedication to S. Radegund.

The second charter of King Malcolm, which re-affirms the former and releases the Nuns from payment of the annual rent of two shillings as well as all secular service, is dated, like the earlier one, 'apud Hunted.' It is tested among others by Engelr[am], the Chancellor, and Nicolas, the Chamberlain. Engelram, who was Chancellor under King David I and continued in the office under Malcolm, succeeded Herbert as Bishop of Glasgow in 1164[1], and Nicolas was Chamberlain from 1160 or 1161 to 1165[2]. As the charter does not give Engelram the title of Bishop we shall probably be right in dating it between the years 1160–1164.

This second charter of Malcolm seems to be the earliest in which the Nunnery has the title 'of S. Mary and S. Radegund.' We may conclude that the building of the church had at this time made such advance that the chapel of S. Radegund already referred to (which was perhaps in the Norman North transept adjoining the dormitory) was completed and had received its dedication. The new ascription to S. Radegund is significant. In 1159 Malcolm with a Scottish army crossed the sea to aid King Henry II in his expedition against Toulouse. At Poitiers he joined the English King and was honourably entertained by him. Poitiers was then, as it still is, the special centre of the cult of S. Radegund, who had there established her celebrated Abbey of the Holy Cross. Malcolm's visit to Poitiers so closely preceding his second charter seems to be connected with the dedication given to the chapel which he had been instrumental in raising[3].

§ 7. Grant of Stephen de Scalariis and later benefactions.

Between the two charters of King Malcolm should probably be placed the grant of 80 acres of land 'cum quodam managio' in West Wratting, made by Stephen de Scalariis and his wife, Juliana, on placing their daughter, Sibil, in the Nunnery. This land is stated to be given in perpetual alms, free from all services and customs 'preter Danegild regis solummodo[1].' It formed part of large estates in the neighbourhood of West Wratting which at the date of Domesday were held by Harduin de Scalers[2]. Bishop Nigellus confirmed this grant in a charter which includes S. Radegund in the dedication but cannot be later than 1161, as among the witnesses is William (of Laventon), Archdeacon of Ely, whose death, as before stated, occurred in 1160 or 1161. The West Wratting land is still the property of Jesus College.

It is unnecessary to record in detail the successive benefactions which followed those of Malcolm and Stephen de Scalariis. By far the larger number of the acquisitions evidenced by the Nuns' muniments consisted of houses and lands in the town and fields of Cambridge. Outside the town limits they held property in the county of Cambridge at West Wratting, Weston (Colvile), Little Abington, Littlington, Bassingbourn, Great Shelford, Trumpington, Madingley, Barton, Long Stanton, Hokington, Caxton, Crawden and Ely; in Essex at Little Walden, Steventon, Ashdon, Bartlow, Berden, Little Chetham and Thundersley; in Lincolnshire at Rippingale. Nearly all dedicated to S. Radegund; those of Postling (Kent) and Whitwell (Isle of Wight) to S. Mary and S. Radegund. Bradsole Abbey, near Dover, founded 1191, was dedicated to S. Radegund, as was also the house of Trinitarian Friars at Thelesford, co. Warwick. There was a chapel of S. Radegund in old S. Paul's, London.

these grants are of very early date, most of them belonging to the 13th century. Nearly all were of inconsiderable value and many of them had been alienated before the end of the 13th century. A few of the more interesting benefactions deserve more particular mention.

Roger fitz Hugh of Clencwareton in an early undated charter confirms the gift which his father had made to the Nuns of an annual rent of three coombs (cumbas) of salt out of a salina at Lynn, called Heveckescote. In the time of the Prioress Letitia the Nuns had acquired one half of this salina, which they granted for an annual rent of three octodali[1] of salt to one Bartholomew fitz Ralf.

One of the principal benefactors to the Nunnery in its early days was Hervey Dunning, generally called Hervey fitz Eustace. His name, either as a benefactor or as a witness to the grants and indentures of others, is of more frequent occurrence than any other in the Nuns' muniments; the deeds in which it occurs belong to the reign of John and the early part of that of Henry III. He belonged to one of the oldest burgher families of Cambridge. A Gilbert son of Dunning is one of the witnesses to Constance's charter, and several generations of the family may be traced in the Hundred Rolls, which attest that Hervey's grandfather, Dunning, derived his title to the large estates which he held in Cambridge 'per anticum successum antecessorum suorum.' The bulk of these estates at the time of the Hundred Rolls had become the property of the Scholars of Merton. The social status of the family is sufficiently indicated by the fact that it enjoyed the then exceptional dignity of occupying a 'stone house,' which is doubtless to be identified with the ancient Norman dwelling-house known as the 'School of Pythagoras.' One of the Nuns' deeds shows that as late as 1342 a tenement in S. Giles' parish was called Dunnyngistede and was then in the possession of Thomas, son of Sir John de Cambridge. Hervey witnesses two deeds in the capacity of [1] Octodalus = a coomb, or half a quarter, in 13th century English called an eytendele.

'alderman[1],' and to two others his seal is appended bearing the impression of a mounted knight and the legend SIGILL. HERVEI FILII EVSTACHII. He was a benefactor of Barnwell Priory and of S. John's Hospital, and gave to the latter seven acres in the fields of Chesterton, the Hospital granting him in return 'duo grabata cum pannis ad illa necessaria ad opus infirmorum in domo nostra lapidea[2].' When the new chapel of the Hospital was built he gave to the Nuns of S. Radegund a rent of 12*d.* out of land in S. John's parish, Milne St., in part recompense of any loss of parish dues which might be occasioned to their church of All Saints in Jewry (Charters, 180). Hervey had a sister, Roda, who had taken the veil in the Nunnery, and with her he gave to the Nuns many houses and lands scattered in the parishes and fields of Cambridge (Charters, 362). By another deed he granted them 10 acres in Cambridge fields for the soul of his deceased wife, Beatrice (Charters, 330).

Contemporary with Hervey fitz Eustace was Walter de Lindsey, who, with his wife Bertha[3], gave to the Nuns the [1] Doubtless of the Gild Merchant of Cambridge, which was granted to the burgesses by King John in the second year of his reign. The alderman was the chief officer of a gild. (Gross, The Gild Merchant, Vol. I. p. 79.) Until the Municipal Corporations Act of 1835, when the Corporation of Cambridge assumed the title of 'The Mayor, Aldermen and Burgesses,' their official style was 'The Mayor, Bailiffs and Burgesses.' In Latin deeds the borough aldermen are always ballivi, and in the oldest the mayor is capitalis or major ballivus. In the Nuns' deeds the earliest mention of a mayor is in 1258, when Robert de S. Edmundo was major ballivus.

[3] Possibly this Bertha de Lindsey may be identified with the Bertha whose coffin-lid on the floor of the south transept of the College Chapel bears the well-known inscription, Moribus ornata jacet hic bona Berta rosata.

It has been a little too hastily assumed that this good lady was a Nun, but Nuns' graves were generally uninscribed. Sherman has a story about a Nun's gravestone in the College Chapel which is worth repeating, as it is not printed in Halliwell's edition of the Historia. In the year 1609 died in his 90th year a fellow of the College, Robert Landesdale, who had dwelt within the College walls as a fellow for no less than 58 years, and had been admitted in the reign of Henry VIII, in 1546. When his grave was being made in the Chapel an 'urna lapidea' was dug up, enclosing the 'ashes' of a Nun. 'So,' says homage of Ralf le Feutrer and a rent of four shillings paid by the said Ralf out of a messuage in Trinity parish; also a messuage at Sarandscroft, opposite the Nunnery. To him and to his wife, Bertha, the Nuns (Letitia, Prioress) leased a house newly built and finished, in Cambridge, for the term of their lives, with the singular stipulation that the rent should be two shillings until the said Walter should return from his pilgrimage to Jerusalem, but that if he died there it should be increased to six shillings so long as his wife lived.

Among the benefactors of the Nunnery occur the names of several members of the family of de Trumpitune. A deed of Sir Roger de Trumpitune, whose brass in Trumpington church is dated 1289, releases to the Nuns free entry to certain land of theirs in Trumpington fields, for which they are to pay him a rent of 2 lbs. of cumin, and two shillings, as relief, at each change of Prioress. Another member of the family, Hervey de Trumpitune, grants to them a rent of two shillings along with his daughter, Margaret. Another once important Trumpington family was that of Cayli. Ralf de Kailli at a very early date gave the Nuns 30 acres there, and Simon de Cayli, for the soul of his wife, who was buried in S. Radegund's church, gave them an acre at Wyrtones diche.

Sherman, 'the fellows of the College, who living are to this day maintained by the Nuns' revenues, in death come to be buried in the same tombs with them.' In the audit accounts for 1608—9 there is an entry, 'Receaved...for a coffin stone diged out of ye chappell at ye making of Mr Landesdales grave, vj^s^ viij^d^.' Elsewhere Sherman says that an 'urn,' bearing the inscription 'Moribus,' &c., was dug up and desecrated 'by foul and sacrilegious hands' (i.e. by William Dowsing), in 1644. It contained the skeleton of a Nun, which 'fell to dust and ashes' on being touched. Sherman supposes Bertha to have been professed in S. Radegund's Nunnery a short time before its dissolution, but the lettering of the stone is of a 13th century type. The date, 1261, in Arabic numerals, which the stone now bears, is an addition seemingly of the 17th century. I do not know what evidence there is for fixing Bertha's death in that particular year. The inscription, it may be noted, is plagiarized from a similar epitaph, given in Weever's Funeral Monuments, p. 242 (ed. 1631), on Bertha, the Kentish queen, whose marriage with Ethelbert brought Christianity into England:

Moribus ornata jacet hic regina beata
Bertha, &c.

John Porthors[1], a wealthy townsman of Cambridge, temp. Edward I, gave, with licence, to the Nuns 7½ acres dispersedly lying in Cambridge fields. He also bestowed on them a yearly rent of 13d. out of a messuage in All Saints' parish near the Hospital, for the health of his soul and for the souls of his father, John de Berton, and his mother, Agnes, and that his father's soul might not be imperilled by reason of his having retained a yearly rent of two shillings customably due to the Nuns out of a messuage in S. Clement's parish.

About the same period William Sueteye gave the Nuns a messuage in S. Andrew's parish; the moiety of a messuage and croft in S. Radegund's parish to maintain a lamp in the chapel of S. Radegund; a rent of eight shillings out of certain land in the market for a lamp in the Nuns' choir, wheresoever the choir should be; and 32½ acres in Cambridge fields.

John de Trippelowe, alias de Dicton, rector of Herdewyk, co. Cambr., was the latest considerable benefactor of the Nuns. He had been appointed in 1325 by the Prioress to the rectory of Reymerston, co. Norfolk, which he exchanged in 1340 for that of Hardwick. A Richard de Dicton was presented by the Nuns to S. Clement's in the latter year. They seem to have been sons of Master Henry de Trippelowe, who figures in some of the Nuns' deeds in connection with them, and who was alderman of the gild of S. Mary in 1321[2]. John de Trippelowe, with licence dated Edw. III, 5, gave the Nuns seven messuages in the parish of S. Radegund, one in the parish of S. Andrew without Barnwell gate, and eight acres in Cambridge and Barnwell fields. Many other grants of property, mainly situated in S. Radegund's parish, were made by him in the reign of Edward III. The last deed in which his name occurs is dated 1349, when he seems to have died, as a new rector

The names Lominor (the Illuminator) and Parchemeniere, which occur in the Nuns' deeds, are evidence that the trade of book-producing was early established in Cambridge. John Porthors occupied a stone house at the corner opposite to S. Sepulchre's Church, for which he paid a rent of 2½ marks to Barnwell Priory (Barnwell Liber Memorandorum).

was appointed to Hardwick in June 1349. After the visitation of the Black Death in that year the Nuns received no considerable accessions of property.

§ 8. Advowsons of the Nuns. The Parish of S. Radegund.

The rectories and advowsons in the possession of the Nunnery were all obtained at an early period of its history. It will be convenient first to sketch the history of the parish church of S. Radegund, although its actual appropriation to the Nuns was not earliest in date. Sherman states that the rectory of the parish church of S. Radegund was appropriated to the Nuns about the year 1291, a yearly pension of forty shillings, to be paid by them, being reserved to the Vicar of All Saints', and he adds that at the same time the parish of S. Radegund was united with that of All Saints, from which it was anciently parted by the King's Ditch[1]. But I can find no authority for the date given for the appropriation, and Sherman is clearly mistaken as regards the union of the two parishes. After 1291 they were never in any sense united so long as the Nunnery existed. The Nunnery deeds bear witness that, from the middle of the 13th century to within a very few years of the dissolution of the Priory, tenements in Radegund Lane on and adjoining the Nuns' croft were regularly described as being in the parish of S. Radegund, and after the foundation of the College and the dedication of the church to the Name of Jesus tenements are similarly described as being in Jesus parish[2]. Long after the College had taken the place of the Nunnery, in fact down to the middle of the present century, the Audit books, in which the receipts from house rental in Cambridge are classed together according to parishes, though they do not make a separate heading for the parish of S. Radegund yet distinguish houses in venella Jesu from those in parochia Omnium Sanctorum.

Nor was this distinction merely a civil and local one. There is ample evidence that the Nuns' church, and afterwards the chapel of the College in its earlier days, served all the purposes and had all the privileges attaching to a parish church. At the end of the Register of Bishop Gray of Ely (1454—1478) under the heading 'Nomina Patronorum Ecclesiarum et Vicariarum' it is recorded that 'Ecclesia parochialis in monasterio S. Radegundis, Cant., appropriata est eisdem Priorisse et Conventui et regitur per capellanum parochialem.' In the accounts of Agnes Banastre, treasuress in 1450—1451, there is mention of a cover for the font, 'et in factura unius coopertorii pro le font ecclesie Sancte Radegundis, vj^{d}.' When Bishop Alcock destroyed the western portion of the nave, which served the parishioners as their church, in place of the old west door he made a new door for their use near the south-west corner of the shortened nave[1]. In the Statutes which Bishop Stanley gave to the College in 1514, cap. 19 (de Curato) it is ordained that one of the Fellows shall be annually elected Curate of the parish church of S. Radegund annexed to the College, to have the cure of souls of all dwelling there, to administer sacraments and sacramentals and to receive for his pains as the Master and Fellows may determine. The farmers of the dominical lands adjoining the College retained

[1] The authors of the Architectural History of Cambridge, Vol. II. p. 173, regard this door as intended for the private use of the Master of the College, on whose garden it now opens. But the statutes of Bishop Stanley, cap. 28, show that in 1512 the ground on the south side of the Master's lodge was not enclosed as a garden, for the Master was thereby empowered either to enclose or to build upon it at his own charges. And in 1592, when Hammond's plan of Cambridge was made, the Master's garden did not extend so far east as the door in question. The eastern portion of the area now comprised in the Master's garden is described in the early Audit accounts as 'the churchyard' or 'garlicke faire close,' and was parted from the original garden of the Lodge by a mud wall, which is mentioned in a lease of 1555. In the Audit accounts for 1558 is a payment for '24 dised nailes for ye churche yard dore xij^{d}.' Burials in 'Jesus churchyard' are mentioned as late as 1543.

the right of attending the College church so late as the reign of Queen Mary, for in a lease of the Radegund Manor, dated 1555, it is covenanted that 'bothe the colledge and the vicare of Alhallows shall suffer hereafter the farmers to come and frequent the colledge church to hear their divine service, accordinglie as it is specified in a payre of indentures betweene the sayde m^r and fellows and the sayde vicare, except it be in the plaigue tyme.' This covenant is not repeated in later leases of the Manor, and from the fact that the farmers' privilege of attending the College church was then protected by covenant and indenture we may suppose that even in 1555 it was considered obsolescent.

There is no direct evidence, so far as I am aware, either to establish or disprove the date, 1291, which Sherman gives for the appropriation of S. Radegund's rectory to the Nuns. The Hundred Rolls indeed, though they expressly state that the churches of All Saints and S. Clement were so appropriated, say nothing about the appropriation of S. Radegund's, whence it might be inferred that it had not taken place in 1278. But the fact that the church was conventual is sufficient to account for the omission of S. Radegund's from the record of the spiritual possessions of the Nunnery. Probably it was appropriated to it from its first existence as a parish church.

I have shown that the parish of S. Radegund was undoubtedly not united to that of All Saints after the middle of the 13th century; it may be concluded with almost equal certainty that S. Radegund's parish had no separate existence before that time. Tenements near the Nunnery are not described in the oldest deeds as being situated in S. Radegund's parish, which is first mentioned in deeds of the time of Milisentia, who was Prioress in 1246 and was succeeded in the office in or before 1258. Evidence of the late origin of the parish is seen in the fact that one of its boundaries was the King's Ditch. It is generally stated that this ditch was made by Henry III in 1268, but there was an earlier enclosure of the town in 1215. Previous to 1250 the Nuns' croft did not extend so far as to the King's Ditch, for in that year the Nuns received licence from Henry III to enclose a certain croft of theirs lying between the Nunnery and the Ditch. It is therefore fairly certain that S. Radegund's parish, which was conterminous with the Nuns' demesne lands, came into existence soon after that year.

Bowtell in his MSS (p. 1011) states, without giving his authority, that the parish of the Holy Sepulchre was severed from that of All Saints in the reign of Henry III. The pension of forty shillings which the Nuns were required to pay to the vicar of All Saints' is tolerably clear proof that S. Radegund's was formed by a similar detachment from the same parish. 'When a chapel was made parochial one of the remaining signs of dependence on the Mother Church was generally some stated pension to the Rector or Vicar of it[1].' Such, no doubt, was the origin of the Nuns' pension to the vicar of All Saints'. The fact that it was paid to the vicar is evidence that the parish of S. Radegund was not severed from that of All Saints until after Sturmi's appropriation of the latter church to the Nuns.

The area detached from All Saints' parish to form that of S. Radegund comprised only the demesne lands of the Nunnery, afterwards known as Radegund Manor. At the time of its formation the latter parish can have contained only a very few inhabitants. The Hundred Rolls mention only four messuages in it, all of them paying rent to the Nuns and all of them situated on a croft called Sarandscroft, opposite the Nunnery gates. Later these were subdivided into smaller holdings, and houses began to be built on the south side of the Nuns' croft, next the street and between the Nunnery and the King's Ditch. The occupants of the houses in the parish seem to have been principally the clergy and servants of the Nunnery.

As the whole, or very nearly the whole area of the parish belonged to the Nuns it is natural that the Hundred Rolls referring to one of their tenements describe it as lying in their own parish, 'in sua parochia.' It was probably, like many other parishes whose churches were also conventual, a peculiar, i.e. exempt from the jurisdiction and visitation of the archdeacon. I do not know that this is anywhere stated as a fact, nor do I find any record of a papal bull conferring such exemption. Nor can reliance be placed on the fact mentioned in one of the Nuns' documents dated 1313 and frequently noticed in the Ely Episcopal Registers (e.g. under dates July 24, 1338, and May 9, 1340) that the Nuns were discharged from procurations to the archdeacon; for this immunity from the charges of visitation extended evidently to All Saints' and S. Clement's churches as well as to S. Radegund's, and was grounded on the poverty of the Nuns, whose whole spiritualities were stated to be of less yearly value than six marks. In the absence of any direct evidence as to the origin of the parish I can only rely on certain facts which tend to show that S. Radegund's was not a parish of the ordinary kind. Firstly, the capellanus, so far as can be gathered from the Ely Registers, was never presented by the Nuns to the Bishop for admission to the parish church. Secondly, he appears to have been maintained by a stipend, paid by the Nuns, which in the accounts of 1449—1451 was £5. And thirdly, among the miscellaneous documents contained in the Nuns' treasury there remain a few wills, one of which, that of Roger Mason of S. Radegund's parish, dated 1392, has attached to it the ad causas seal of the Nunnery. The wills of inhabitants of exempt parishes attached to religious houses, as is well known, were customarily proved before the sacrist or some other officer of the monastery. The parish of the Nunnery of Carow, Norwich, was an example of such an exempt jurisdiction; the Nuns' chaplain proved the wills of parishioners, and the ad causas seal of the convent was appended to them[1].

§ 9. Parish of All Saints.

The advowson of All Saints' in Judaismo or juxta Hospitale, as it was called to distinguish it from the church similarly dedicated juxta Castellum, was given to the Nuns by Sturmi[1] of Cambridge either in or before 1180. His charter recites that the donation is made 'by the wish and with consent of his wife and his heirs, for the welfare of King Henry and his heirs and for the welfare of the faithful departed.' The Nuns are to hold the advowson as freely and quietly as his antecessores have held the same. Of Sturmi we know no more than that a person of his name is described as 'frater noster' in a deed of the Prioress Letitia. Geoffrey Ridel, Bishop of Ely, in the presence and with the consent of Sturmi, instituted the Nuns to the rectory, 'jus personatus,' of the same church. His charter is dated on the day after the octave of S. Martin in the year 1180. He appoints one Richard as the Nuns' perpetual vicar in the church and requires him to make to them an annual payment of twenty shillings, and further to perform all customary dues to the Bishop. After the cession or decease of the said Richard the Nuns may make such disposition for their church as they will, saving the episcopal consuetudines. At a considerably later date the Convent of Ely (Roger, Prior, i.e. Roger de Brigham, Prior from 1215 to 1229) confirmed the Bishop's appropriation to the Nuns. It was also ratified by a bull of Pope Alexander IV (1254—1261) mentioned by Sherman, in whose time it seems to have been extant among the Nuns' evidences.

The Nuns, as already stated, probably when S. Radegund's parish was severed from All Saints, bound themselves to an annual pension of forty shillings to the vicar of the latter parish. As the net result of the cross payments we find the Nuns in 1449–1451 paying the vicar the sum of twenty shillings per annum. In the Bursars' Rolls, temp. Henry VIII and Edward VI, this payment had been increased to 33*s.* 4*d.* Doubtless this was in compensation for the loss of income which the vicar may have sustained owing to the conversion of the Nunnery into a college, for when the Hospital of S. John gave place to S. John's College the vicar complained of the loss which he received from the change, and the College undertook to give him an annual pension of five marks in satisfaction of his claims[1]. The Visitors of the University in 1549 decreed that Jesus College should pay the vicar an additional sum of 6*s.* 8*d.* by the year, and the pension thus increased to 40*s.* has continued to be paid up to the present time.

§ 10. Parish of S. Clement.

The advowson of S. Clement's Church was given to the Elemosinary of S. Radegund by Hugh fitz Absolon of Cambridge, acting on the advice of Eustace, late Bishop of Ely. Bishop Eustace died in 1215 and the grant is evidently to be dated very soon after that year, for the Pedes Finium (ed. Rye for the Camb. Antiq. Soc.) mentions among Cambridge pleas anno Henry III, 3 (1218) 'Estrilda fil. Scobic v. the Prioress of S. Radegund, of the advowson of S. Clement's.' It would seem from this that the Nuns did not acquire pacific possession of the advowson at once, and this is further shown by the fact that Walter fitz William de S. Edmund, in a deed of date seemingly about 1230–1240, released to the Nuns his rights to the advowson and confirmed the grant thereof made by his antecessor, Hugh fitz Absolon and his uncle Walter. It would be interesting to know something of the original patrons of Cambridge churches and the circumstances which gave them their right to present to the livings. Unfortunately the Nuns' deeds have very little light to throw on the matter in the case either of All Saints' or of S. Clement's. The only information which I can gather of this Hugh fitz Absolon is obtained from his charters, several of which (two with his seal attached) are to be found among the Nunnery muniments. In one he grants the Nuns a rent of 29½*d.* out of the land in the Jews' street (in vico Judeorum) going down from the highway to All Saints' churchyard. The grant is for the health of the souls of himself and his sister Letitia, and the Nuns are required to celebrate yearly the anniversary of his sister on the eve of the

[1] Cole's MSS. Vol. III. p. 65.

Purification, and on the day of the Purification are to have the whole rent for their pietancia. He also gave them a rent of 12*d.* for their Infirmary and six acres in Cambridge and Barnwell fields. His cousin Aldusa, daughter of William Blangernun, who was buried in the convent church, gave them property in the parish of S. Mary the Great.

The Rectory of S. Clement's was appropriated to the Nuns of S. Radegund of Grenecroft by John de Fontibus, Bishop of Ely (1220–1225), saving a competency for a priest to have the cure of souls. The Nuns' muniments include two charters confirming this grant, one of Ely convent, Roger de Brigham, Prior (1215–1229), the other of Geoffrey de Burgh, Bishop of Ely (1225–1229). Other confirmations by Pope Honorius III (1216–1227) and by Hugh Northwold, Bishop of Ely, the latter dated 1238, are mentioned in a volume of 'Old Letters and Extracts' in the College Library, but are not now extant.

The last-named bishop decreed that the vicar of S. Clement's should pay to the Nuns de bonis altaragii a yearly pension of five marks. From the Nunnery accounts it appears that this sum was set apart to provide the clothing of the Nuns[1]. The benefice, already denuded of the rectorial tithes, seems from the first to have been ill able to support this heavy additional charge. So early as 1248 we find a lively dispute proceeding between the Nuns and the vicar, Adam, on some pecuniary question, probably connected with this pension. The vicar cited the Nuns before the Dean of S. Paul's, i.e. the Court of Arches: the Nuns contested the vicar's right to convene them, on the ground that he was at the time under sentence of excommunication, and when this plea was disallowed by the Dean they appealed to the court of Rome. The Pope, Innocent IV, by bull addressed to the Prior of Linton commissioned him to inquire into the circumstances. Of the Prior's decision we are not informed; but the issue between the Nuns and their vicars remained in an unsettled state for long after. In 1261 Sir Geoffrey, who was then vicar, acknowledges himself to be indebted to the Nuns for 2½ marks, being part of the pension of 5 marks assigned by Bishop Northwold, and he asks to be allowed time to pay it. Hugh de Stamford, Commissary General of the Official of Ely, decrees that he is to pay one mark on S. Nicolas' Day and 20*s.* before the Epiphany next following. A century and a half later, in 1401, Adam de Walsoken, vicar, takes the opportunity of the metropolitical visitation of the Archbishop of Canterbury, Thomas Arundel, to represent to him that he is charged with an annual pension to the Nuns of five marks, that he has no proper vicarage to reside in, and that the income of the living is 'tenuis et exilis[1].' In consequence of the vicar's complaint the Nuns (Isabella de Sudbury, Prioress) on July 11, 1402, agreed to give up as a mansum for the then vicar and his successors a house on the eastern side of the churchyard, next a messuage of the service of the glorious Virgin Mary, i.e. the chantry house of S. Clement's Church. The deed (Charters, 242) in which they make this concession bears evidence to the Nuns' extreme reluctance to accept any responsibility in the matter. The curiously mixed motives which actuated them are shown in the reasons given for the concession, viz. that the incomes of parochial churches are everywhere decreasing, that the results of actions at law are doubtful, and that it is desirable that the church, being baptismalis, should be served duly and to the honour of God. The pension of five marks was continuously exacted by the Nuns up to the time of the dissolution of the Nunnery, and even survived until late in the reign of Henry VIII, as shown by the account rolls of the College Bursars[2].

[1] The incomes of the parish clergy were seriously affected by the Black Death and the long financial depression which succeeded it. Compare Piers Plowman, Prologue, 83 (date 1377),

> Persones and parisch prestes pleyned hem to þe bischop > þat here parisches were pore sith þe pestilence time.

[2] From the Bursars' accounts of Henry VIII, 26—27, it appears that the § 11. Advowson of Reymerston.

The advowson of Reymerston Church, co. Norfolk, was conveyed by fine to Letitia, Prioress of S. Radegund's in Henry III, 2, by John de Reymerston. A list of the rectors presented by the Prioress is given in Blomfield's History of Norfolk, Vol. 10, pp. 241—2 (ed. Parkyn). The last presented, in 1401, was Mr Robert Braunch, LL.Lic., apparently the same who in 1384 became Master of Trinity Hall.

The names of several of the Nuns, Craneswick, Harling, Cressingham, are taken from villages in the neighbourhood of Reymerston and appear to indicate that the connection with this quarter of Norfolk was maintained after the Nuns parted with the advowson. From the same district probably came John de Pykenham (now Pickenham), whose tombstone, in the vicar of S. Clement's was allowed an annual sum of 6*s*. 8*d*. for rent of a dwelling house 'eo quod non est aliqua domus sive mansio dicto vicario pertinens.' A few years later the payment disappears from the Bursars' rolls and the vicar, who was a fellow of the College, is stated to be the tenant of a chamber in College. The Rev. E. G. de Salis Wood, vicar of S. Clement's, informs me that the house traditionally called 'the Vicarage' is that now numbered 8, Portugal Place, which is still the property of Jesus College. Leases of the reign of Elizabeth describe it as abutting on its southern side on 'the backe side of a place sometime called St Clement's hostell.' A deed of Edward III, 47 (1373) shows that it was then leased to Sir Richard Milde, vicar of S. Clement's, jointly with John de Kelesseye, cooper, and Avisia his wife. Another deed of 1377 (Charters, 250 b) gives minute details of the rooms which it then contained. In 1616 the southern half of the house was used as a stable by the Master of Jesus College. A letter of the Master, Dr Duport, in that year refers to a dispute between the College and Alderman Ventris with respect to the northern portion of the house, which the latter claimed, asserting that it had anciently been a banqueting house and did not form a part of the College tenement. Ventris also claimed a house called the Chantry-house, situated outside the churchyard on its N.E. side. Dr Duport alleges that this house is not the old Chantry-house, nor on the site of it, but is an encroachment on Jesus College land and has been erected within the last 50 years; in evidence of which he observes that it is built of sound heart of oak which apparently was brought from the steeple of the church, which about the time of the erection of the house was much decayed and vanished quite away.

S.W. angle of the south transept of the Nuns' church, bears the inscription, Hic jacet frater Johannes de Pykenham magister sacre theologie prior hujus loci cujus anime propicietur Deus.

He was perhaps either capellanus or confessor to the Nuns. The office of prior, warden or magister monialium is one frequently found in nunneries; e.g. at Grimsby, Stanfeld (Lincs.), Stamford, Catesby.

§ 12. List of Prioresses.

The following is as complete a list of the Prioresses of S. Radegund as it is possible to make out. Unless otherwise stated the dates given are those of the earliest and latest deeds in which the name occurs. The deeds of the 12th and early 13th century give neither dates nor names of Prioresses.

Letitia was Prioress at the time of Bishop Eustace's composition respecting All Saints' Church and S. John's Hospital, which was not later than 1213: she occurs in Pedes Finium, 1228.

Milisentia is mentioned in Pedes Finium 1246 and 1249.

Dera occurs in 1258.

Agnes Burgeylun, or Burgeillo, in 1274 (in the new Monasticon wrongly set down anno 1301).

Constantia and Amitia de Driffeld occur in undated deeds temp. Edward I, the former in the mayoralty of Roger de Wykes.

Alicia le Chaumberlain was Prioress about 1278; she was daughter of Sir Walter le Chamberlayne, purchaser of the manor of Landbeach. (Clay's History of Landbeach.)

Elena occurs in 1284 and in 1299.

Christiana de Braybrok in 1311.

Cecilia de Cressingham, in 1315 and 1316.

Mabilia Martin in 1330 and 1332.

Alicia in 1347.

Eva Wasteneys in 1359; a person of the same name was Prioress of the Benedictine house of Swaffham in 1378.

Margaret Clanyle in 1363: she resigned Feb. 1, 1378 (Ely Registers).

Alice Pilet was elected Feb. 20, 1378; occurs in 1398.

Isabella Sudbury in 1402.

Margaret Harlyng was sub-prioress in 1407; succeeded as Prioress in the same year and occurs in 1408.

Agnes Seyntelowe, or Senclowe, first occurs in 1415; she died Sept. 8, 1457.

Joan Lancastre was elected Sept. 27, 1457; last occurs in 1466.

Isabella in 1468.

Elizabeth Walton occurs in 1468 and 1479: she had been succentrix in 1457.

Joan Cambridge was administering the effects of the Nunnery in 1482–3, apparently in a vacancy of the Priorate; she was Prioress in 1483 and died 1487[1].

Joan Fulburn was appointed Oct. 12, 1487; her name occurs for the last time in 1487.

At the time of the election of Joan Lancastre in 1457 there were eleven nuns who had the jus eligendi. There are no data for determining their number at an earlier period, but as most religious houses suffered a decline in numbers during the 15th century it is not unlikely that they had once been more numerous. There seems little reason to doubt that at no time during the existence of the Nunnery were its endowments adequate for the maintenance of its inmates or the repairs of the fabric. As early as 1277 their penury 'haud paucis innotescit'; in 1340 their poverty was pleaded as an excuse for exemption from the charges of procuration; and the evidence of Archbishop Wittlesey's visitor in 1373 shows the Nunnery in deep embarrassment, its buildings dilapidated, and its services neglected for want of funds. The flow of benefactions which was maintained up to the end of Edward I's reign was arrested about the end of the 13th century, probably because gifts to pious uses began to be diverted to the various mendicant orders which had established themselves in Cambridge during the preceding half century. As already stated, after the great pestilence in 1349 the Nuns received few fresh endowments, and those of inconsiderable value. One important source of endowment entirely dried up about that time, viz. the grants of lands and rents made by the relations of a nun when she took the veil. The nuns of the earlier time seem largely to have been drawn from families of wealth and social standing in the town and shire. Among those who brought with them endowments to the Nunnery were Sibil, sister of Fulk Crocheman, whose family held a considerable amount of property in and near the Jewry in All Saints' parish temp. Henry III; Elizabeth and Isabel, daughters of Sir Thomas de Cambridge, who died 1361; Roda, sister of Hervey Dunning, already mentioned; Margaret, daughter of Hervey de Trumpitune; Sabina, daughter of Ralf Person of Chesterton, temp. Henry III; Sibil, daughter of Stephen de Scalariis of Wratting; and Margaret, sister of Philip de Cestertune, about 1200. The accounts of the Treasuress, Agnes Banastre, for the two years 1449–50 and 1450–51 probably represent the normal income and expenditure of the Nunnery in the middle of the 15th century. They are written on skin in a neat and minute hand, which is perhaps that of one of the clergy attached to the house. On the outer surface are written the accounts of the Grangeress, Joan Lancastre. Also on the outer side of the earlier roll are copied in a bold but careless handwriting of late 15th century character three Latin prayers addressed to S. Etheldreda, to which in another hand have been added two benedictions of the Name of Jesus. The prayers to S. Etheldreda were clearly intended for use at her shrine at Ely.

These accounts are kept in an exact and orderly way and show that at the time the Nuns were fairly paying their way. In the earlier year the receipts were £77. 8*s.* 6½*d.* and the expenditure £72. 6*s.* 4¾*d.*; in the later the sums were respectively £74. 2*s.* 9½*d.* and £78. 6*s.* 0*d.*[1]. The heads of the receipts were in the later year:

§ 14. Incidents in the Annals of the Nunnery.

There is little in the history of the Nunnery between the time of King Malcolm and that of the dissolution which calls for particular mention. Such facts as are recoverable from the Nuns' own records it is unnecessary here to detail; an outline of them may be found in the Catalogue of Charters. I will set down here only a few particulars which I have gleaned from such external sources of information as the Hare MSS and the Registers of Ely and Canterbury.

Among the Hare MSS (Vol. I. p. 27) is a writ of Henry III tested at Ely, March 30, in the 35th year of his reign (i.e. 1250), directed to the bailiffs of the town of Cambridge, requiring them not to distrain the Prioress of S. Radegund and her tenants for an encroachment (pro preprestura) and for other matters of which inquisition has been made by William de Axmuth and William Brito at Cambridge. This writ is clearly connected with the same King's license to the Nuns, tested at Westminster on April 17 in the same year, to enclose and keep enclosed for ever a croft belonging to them and lying between their church and the fossatum of Cambridge. (This license is cited in full in King Edward II's confirmation, Charters, 8.) From the circumstance that the writ was addressed to the town bailiffs it would appear that the purpresture of the Nuns consisted of an encroachment on the common lands of the town, i.e. on Grenecroft. The writ stays the distraint until the quindena of Easter, by which time, or at least before April 17, an arrangement seems to have been arrived at by which the town relinquished its rights in the land annexed. But as the ownership of the soil of the common land belonged not to the burgesses but to the King (such at least would be the King's view) his sanction was necessary to enable the Nuns to acquire and permanently enclose the croft[1]. The dispute between the Nuns and the burgesses seems to have been the outcome of proceedings for encroachment taken by the King against the burgesses: for by a writ, mentioned by Cooper[2] and dated March 5 in this year, the King required the sheriff to restore the cattle of the burgesses and not further to distrain them for a trespass, they having paid at the royal wardrobe 20 marks. The encroachment for which the burgesses thus made satisfaction was no doubt committed on the soil of the fossatum. At the time of the Hundred Rolls it was one of the complaints of the townsmen that the soil of the fossatum remained void to their great loss, and several individuals are reported to have made encroachments on it by planting trees and otherwise.

[1] Sherman gives the total of receipts in these two years as £24. 1*s.* 10½*d.* and £32. 10*s.* 2*d.*, figures which correspond to no totals in the rolls. He also refers to a third roll of date Henry VI, 39, in which the receipts are stated as £74. 2*s.* 4*d.*; this is no longer extant. He does not mention the roll of Edward IV, 21—22.

[1] Pollock and Maitland (History of English Law, Vol. I. p. 635), speaking of the Firma Burgi, 'It may be much doubted whether the walls, ditches, streets and open spaces of the borough were held by the burgesses. They were still the king's walls, ditches and streets, and he who encroached upon them committed a purpresture against the king. Nor is it by any means certain that the king parted with the soil over which the burgesses exercised the right of pasture.'

[2] Annals, Vol. I. p. 46.

The Register of Archbishop Wittlesey (fo. 153), at Lambeth Palace, gives a full and curious account of a visitation of the Nunnery in the year 1373, made by mandate of the Archbishop during a vacancy of the See of Ely. The visitor was Thomas de Wormenhale, who about the same time visited other religious houses in the diocese, viz. Ely, Chatteris, Anglesey, Swaffham, Thorney, Barnwell and the Hospital of S. John, Cambridge. The Nunnery of S. Radegund was visited on the Saturday next following the feast of S. James the Apostle. The Prioress and sisters were separately and privately examined, and the report of the visitor exhibited the following comperta.

First, it was alleged that the Prioress made the officiariae of the Nunnery discharge payments beyond what was required by the custom of their offices, and without assigning reason for such payments. The Prioress denied this article, but was nevertheless cautioned in future to explain to her officials the reasons for all expenditure required of them.

Item, that the Prioress did not, as she was bound to do, find priests to celebrate for various benefactors of the Nunnery. The Prioress made reply that the means of the Nuns were not sufficient to sustain the said burdens. She was cautioned to discharge the obligations of the Nunnery in this respect as soon as the fortunes of the household would enable her to do so.

Item, that the Prioress suffered the Refectory to remain without cover, so that in rainy weather the sisters were not able to take their meals there in common, as by rule they were bound to do. The Prioress answered that the Nunnery was so burdened with debts, subsidies and contributions in these times that so far she had been unable to carry out repairs, but that she would do so as soon as possible.

Item, that the Prioress did not correct dame Elizabeth de Cambridge for withdrawing herself from divine service, and allowed friars of different orders, as well as scholars, to visit her at inopportune times and to converse with her, to the scandal of religion. The Prioress replied that she had frequently corrected her. She was charged in future strictly to correct and chastise her for the faults alleged.

Item, that the Prioress was too easily induced to give permission to the Nuns to go outside the cloister. She was cautioned not to do so in future.

Item, that dame Elizabeth de Cambridge provoked discord among the sisters and often murmured against correction, and that she did not trouble to get up (non curat surgere) to attend matins, as she was bound to do. She denied the fact, and added that, supposing she had so done, she had been corrected by her Prioress. She was warned to cease from murmuring and provoking discord, and to get up for matins, whenever she could (cum poterit), under pain of excommunication.

The Prioress mentioned in this report was Margaret Clanyle. She resigned her office in 1378. Bishop Arundel's Register at Ely (fo. 25) contains the following documents relating to this event.

The Bishop's mandate to his Official, Richard le Scrop, to receive the resignation of domina Margaret Clanyle, and to certify to the Bishop what he has done. Downham, Jan. 29, 1378.

Scrop's certification to the Bishop that he has admitted, approved and authorized the resignation. Cambridge, Feb. 1.

The Bishop's license to the sub-prioress, Johanna de Ely, and the convent to elect a successor. Downham, Feb. 6.

Process of election: 'assumptis sibi quibusdam personis secularibus, vidlt. magistris Thoma de Glocestr' et Johanne de Newton, juris peritis, d^no^ Willelmo Rolf, vicario ecclesie Omnium Sanctorum in Judaismo et magistro Roberto de Foxton, notario publico, pro saniori consilio in hac parte habendo,' domina Alice Pylet is unanimously elected. Feb. 17.

The election is confirmed by the Bishop, Feb. 20, and publication of it made 'ad januam manerii de Downham et in capella dicti manerii.'

On Dec. 10, 1389, Bishop Fordham of Ely granted indulgence of 40 days to all who should help to repair the Nuns' church and cloister and contribute to their maintenance and relief. (Fordhams' Register, fo. 10.)

In the Register of Archbishop Courtenay (fo. 143), under date 1389, is a letter addressed to the same Bishop of Ely, in which the Archbishop reports that in his recent metropolitical visitation of the diocese of Lincoln he found there 'a sheep wandering from the fold among thorns,' to wit, one Margaret Cailly, a professed nun of S. Radegund's monastery, who had cast off the garb of religion and in secular habit was leading a dissolute life. 'That her blood be not required at our hands' the Archbishop sends her with the bearer of the letter to the Bishop, with an injunction that she should be restored to the Nunnery and kept there in safe custody. The Bishop in a letter to the Prioress (Reg. Fordham, fo. 11) directs that the apostate nun be committed to the eventus[1], there to be kept in close confinement until she shows signs of penitence and contrition for her 'excesses,' as the rules of her house and order require. And the Bishop further enjoins that when the said Margaret first enters the chapter-house she shall humbly ask pardon of the Prioress and all her sisters for her offences, and that she shall undergo salutary penances for her excesses, the Bishop having privately absolved her from the penalty of excommunication on the ground of her apostasy.

On Sept. 19, 1401, the Priory was visited by the commissioners of the Archbishop of Canterbury, Thomas Arundel. The sisters were privately and separately questioned but the substance of their answers is not recorded in the Register. (Arundels' Register, fo. 492.)

The Register of Bishop Fordham of Ely (Jan. 26, 1407) contains a license to the sub-prioress, Margery Harlyng, for a private oratory or chapel within the Priory.

On March 18, 1457, Bishop Gray of Ely issued letters, dated from Downham, granting 40 days' indulgence to all who should lend a helping hand ('manus porrexerint adjutrices') for the repair of the bell-tower of the Nuns' conventual church and for the maintenance of books, vestments and other church ornaments (Register, fo. 21).

The Ely Registers (Bp. Gray, fo. 140) supply a full account of the election of a Prioress in 1457 in place of Agnes Seyntelowe, who died on Sept. 8 in that year. The process of election was per formam compromissi, and the description, in outline, is as follows. Maud Sudbury, as sub-prioress and president, informs the Bishop of the vacancy and obtains his license for the election of a successor. In the Nuns' petition to the Bishop for leave to elect it is stated that by the canons a church regular must not be vacant beyond three months 'ne pro defectu regiminis invadat gregem dominicam lupus rapax.' On Sept. 23 they elect Joan Lancastre to be sacrist, and then adjourn to Sept. 27. On that day, after mass de Sancto Spiritu, those who have jus eligendi meet and decant the 'ympn,' Veni Creator, with versicles and collects. Elizabeth Walton, succentrix, proclaims notice of the election at the door of the Priory and at the door of the chapter-house. Master Roger Ratcliffe, LL.D., Robert Bredon, notary public, Master Thomas Willis, LL.B., Ds Richard Sampson and Ds Henry Whitrate, chaplain, are called in as consiliarii and testes. The sisters elect as compromissarii Joan Lancastre, Eliz. Walton and Katherine Seyntelowe, cellarer, who retire to the east end of the chapterhouse with the witnesses aforesaid. E. W. and K. S. call upon J. L. to nominate; she nominates E. W.; J. L. and K. S. call upon E. W. to nominate; she nominates J. L. E. W. and J. L. call upon K. S. to nominate; she nominates J. L. Without any interval the compromissarii return and call upon the sisters to nominate, beginning with Maud Sudbury; she nominates J. L., as do Margaret Metham, Elena Craneswik, Emma Hore and Joan Kay. Emma Denton is nominated by Agnes Daveys, Katherine Seyntelowe by Emma Denton, Agnes Daveys by Alice Graunfeld. Eliz. Walton counts up the votes and declares that Joan Lancastre is elected. After this all the sisters, devoutly chanting Te Deum, conducted Joan Lancastre, 'renitentem licet' to the high altar of the conventual church and there placed her, prostrate on the ground before the altar. The bell was then rung and proclamation of the election was made to the public in the vulgar tongue before noon. All the sisters then conducted the Prioress elect to the vestibulum of the church and let her depart. At a meeting in the chapter-house in the afternoon it was agreed that Eliz. Walton and Katherine Seyntelowe should obtain the assent of Joan Lancastre to the process of election. She at first asked to be allowed to consider the matter; 'tandem vero precibus devicta et post multas excusationes,' she consented to take the oath required of a Prioress. Next follows, Sept. 29, the Bishop's commission to Master Robert Thwait, S. T. P., to confirm the election, with mandate to the Bishop's apparitors to summon all persons objecting or otherwise concerned. In the Bishop's court Master Edmund Kunnesburgh, decretorum doctor, appears as the Nuns' counsel and claims that all has been done legally and canonically. Against whom Roger Ratclyffe and others alleged objections to the form of election. Then Master Kunnesburgh on the part of the Nuns 'exhibuit quandam peticionem summariam,' begging the Bishop's official to proceed summarily and confirm the election, which he does, affirming that nothing has been proved affecting the validity of the election.

Doubts have sometimes been suggested as to the truth of the representations made by Bishop Alcock concerning the lapsed condition, moral and material, of the Priory when he petitioned King Henry VII for license to convert it into a College; and the fact that the royal license to suppress the Hospital of S. John describes the decay of that house in terms which are almost literally repeated from Alcock's account of S. Radegund's Nunnery is perhaps calculated to throw suspicion on the credibility of both accounts. As regards Bishop Alcock's statements there is not the slightest foundation for such a suspicion. The alleged improvidence of the Nuns is established in the clearest manner on their own evidence, and if for the charge of moral shortcomings there is little evidence except the Bishop's it must be allowed that he made the charge in the first instance to them directly and many years before he made up his mind to dissolve their house. All the testimony of his contemporaries and immediate successors gives him the character of an exceptionally single-minded and devout prelate, and he had given pointed proof a few years previously that in dealing with the abuses of a religious house he was disposed to act in a spirit of forbearance and conservatism. In 1480, when he was Bishop of Worcester, he personally visited the Benedictine Priory of Little Malvern, the brethren of which were reported to have dissipated their revenues and to be living 'vagabond' and like laymen. The Bishop ordered the Prior to be removed and sent to the Abbey of Battle, where he had been first professed, and the four monks, who were all that remained in the house, to be transferred to Gloucester Abbey until their Priory should be reconstituted. Alcock then proceeded to refound the convent; he rebuilt the church, altering its dedication from S. Giles to S. John the Evangelist and S. Giles, repaired the monks' lodging and discharged their debts. In 1482 the brethren were allowed to return and the Priory continued to exist more or less prosperously until the general dissolution, at which time it contained seven brethren besides the Prior. After this reformation of the Priory Bishop Alcock was regarded as its patron and founder; its common seal bore his arms, and his figure was portrayed in the windows of the conventual church.

In the absence of direct testimony an entry in the Register of Bishop Gray of Ely in the year 1461 suggests that symptoms of moral depravation began to show themselves very soon after the election of the Prioress Joan Lancastre. In that year Elizabeth Butlier, aged about 16, not having completed four years in the Nunnery and finding that she cannot serve God there with as much devotion as she wishes, obtains leave from the Bishop to transfer herself to the Nunnery of S. Helen's, London. (Register, fo. 157.)

The first evidence of the financial collapse of the Nuns' household appears to be the following indenture of the Prioress Elizabeth Walton, dated March 13, 1478; but if we are to believe the account given by the Prioress the responsibility for some part of their indebtedness belonged to her predecessors in office:

'Whereas we and our predecessors, Prioresse and Nunnes of the saide house at dyvers tymes tofore passed whan we ware destitute of money for our pore lyffing had flessche of Richerd Wodecok of Cambrigge, boucher, into the value of the summe of xxj^{li} of lawful money of Englond, which he for our ease many day hath forborn, And now he of his special favour and elmesse for hym and his executours hath granted unto us license for to paie unto him yeerly xix^{s} to tyme the said summe be fully paied and content, as right and conscience requyre, We therefore considering his benevolence and good wylle anendst us in this behalve wol and by this our present writyng endented graunt and have graunted unto the said Richerd Wodecok and to his executors to have and to receyve of us and our successours by his awne hands yearly xix^{s} to be taken of thissues and profites and ferme of a tenement sett and lyeng in the parissh of Seynt Andrewe in the Prechour Strete of Cambrygge abuttyng upon the Kyngs Dyche and of j other tenement lyeng in Seynt Edwards parisshe of Cambrigge abuttyng upon the Chauncell of the same chirche, Which tenements the said Richerd Wodecok hath and holdeth of us to ferme by endenture for the terme of yeeres as by severall endentures therof by us unto the same Richerd his executours and assignes made hit appareth more at large To have and to hold the said proufets issues and ferme to the value of xix^{s} yeerly unto the time that the foresaid Richerd by his awne hands be satisfied and content of the said xxj^{li},' etc.

This and another indenture of the following year are the latest of the Nuns' documents which bear the large seal of the convent figured opposite p. 1. At some time between 1479 and 1485 the matrix of this seal was apparently lost or sold, for to a deed of the latter year (Joan Cambrygg, Prioress) is attached the impression of a very small and poorly executed seal, representing S. Radegund crowned and standing with both arms uplifted between two upright palm branches, which in the deed is said to be the common seal of the Nunnery.

More direct evidence of the pecuniary straits to which the convent was reduced in the last quarter of the 15th century is to be found in the accounts of Joan Key, who was treasurer in 1481—2. Her account roll, written on paper, alike in handwriting, arithmetic and Latinity is a performance which contrasts very unfavourably with that of her predecessor, 30 years before. The details moreover which it gives are very scant. But one thing is patent enough, viz. that the income of the Nuns had dropped from £74 odd at the earlier date to something over £31 at the later. It is true that the accounts of Joan Key for some reason extend over three-quarters of the year only, but it is an awkward circumstance that in those nine months her disbursements exceeded her receipts by more than £25. Ominous too is the fact that the sale of farm produce had practically ceased to be a source of income and that the Nuns were driven to purchase barley, oats, malt, etc. A small trifle is obtained from the sale of hay, and there are a few receipts for 'commons' of perhendinantes, boarders in the guest-house, two of them being daughters of the Nuns' benevolent creditor, Richard Wodecok. There is one new source of income, the charitable gifts of individuals, cleric and lay.

Bishop Alcock was translated to the see of Ely early in 1486. The death of the Prioress in the following year gave him an opportunity for decisive interference in the affairs of the Nunnery. He has left a record of his proceedings there in his Register (fo. 153) from which the following extracts are translated.

"On the twelfth day of October, A.D. 1487, the Bishop visited the house or monastery of the Nuns of S. Mary and S. Radegund, then destitute of a Prioress and vacant by the death of the late Prioress, Mistress Joan Cambrigge ... and sitting in the chapter-house of the foresaid monastery, on the tribunal, delivered his decree as follows.

UNIV. OF CALIFORNIA

"In the name of God Amen. We, John, by divine permission Bishop of Ely, on the 12th day of October, visiting in our right as ordinary (jure ordinario) the nunnery of S. Mary and S. Radegund, Cambridge, destitute of the solace of a Prioress, for certain, true, just, notorious and manifest causes find all and singular the Nuns unfit and disqualified to elect their future Prioress and therefore decree that in such manner of election they are justly deprived of voice. Wherefore we take upon ourselves the task of providing from some other like religious place a fit person for the vacancy in the said Nunnery, the right of electing and providing for the same Nunnery having devolved canonically upon us, and having the fear of God before our eyes we thus proceed.

"And you, Mistress Joan Fulborne, duly and lawfully professed of the order of S. Benedict and long time laudably conversant in the same, for your good religion and integrity, sincere virginity and other merits of prudence and holy conversation credibly reported to us we appoint and provide to be Prioress of the same house...

"And consequently, by mandate of the Bishop, the reverend Master William Robynson, bachelor in either law, conducted the same Joan Fulborne to the High Altar, while the Nuns, with others, solemnly chanted Te Deum, and assigned to her the stall in the choir and the place in the chapter anciently and of custom appointed to the Prioress, and canonically inducted her into the same with all its rights and appurtenances."

The history of the Nunnery from this year onwards to its dissolution is almost a blank. The accounts of the town treasurer for the year ending the Nativity of the Virgin, 1491, contain an entry, "In reward given the Lady Prioress of S. Radegund of Cambridge for keeping the common bull in the winter time this year, 16d[1]." The Prioress in question was the Joan Fulborne above-mentioned, whose name occurs in several indentures of the Nunnery, the latest of which is dated

[1] Cooper's Annals, Vol. i. p. 240.

Aug. 6, 1493. Whether she died or retired from the Priory before the dissolution or was one of the two sisters who were the sole occupants of the Nuns' house at the time of Bishop Alcock's second visit does not appear[1]. It is certain that she was altogether unsuccessful in rehabilitating the character of the household committed to her charge.

The Proctors in their accounts for the year 1496 mention a sum of 16^{d} expended "for wine given the Bishop of Ely at the Nuns' house." The letters patent of Henry VII. for the foundation of Jesus College, dated June 12 in the eleventh year of his reign, i.e. 1496[2], reveal the condition of affairs reported by the Bishop to the King at the time, it would seem, of this visit. It is therein stated that the King, as well by the report of the Bishop as by public fame, is informed that the House or Priory of S. Radegund of the foundation and patronage of the Bishop, as in right of his church of Ely, together with all its lands, tenements, rents, possessions and buildings, and moreover the properties, goods, jewels and other ecclesiastical ornaments anciently of piety and charity given and granted to the same House or Priory, by the neglect, improvidence, extravagance and incontinence of the Prioresses and women of the said House, by reason of their proximity to the University of Cambridge, have been dilapidated, destroyed, wasted, alienated, diminished and subtracted; in consequence of which the Nuns are reduced

[1] Archbishop Parker, in the History of the University which is appended to his Antiquitates Ecclesiae Britannicae, states that Bishop Alcock 'Alexandro sexto papae retulit abbatissam sanctimonialium Radegondae, ordinis Sancti Benedicti, haud pie casteque vixisse; eaque decedente abbatiam ad ruinam paratam et a virginibus ordinem deserentibus desolatam fuisse, anno Domini 1496.' Apart from the error in the title of abbess Parker's whole account of the Nunnery is so inaccurate that no reliance can be placed on his evidence.

[2] In Rymer's Foedera the date is given as 1497; the same date is given in Documents relating to the University and Town of Cambridge (where the document is printed in full), in Caley's Monasticon, and by Cooper and most modern authorities. But the original in the College Treasury, with royal seal appended, reads beyond question 'anno regni nostri undecimo,' i.e. 1495—6. This accords with Sherman's statement that Alcock began to rebuild the fabric, 'instaurare fabricam coepit,' in the eleventh year of Henry VII.

to such want and poverty that they are unable to maintain and support divine services, hospitality and other such works of mercy and piety as by the primary foundation and ordinance of their founders are required; that they are reduced in number to two only, of whom one is elsewhere professed, the other is of ill-fame[1], and that they can in no way provide for their own sustenance and relief, insomuch that they are fain to abandon their House and leave it in a manner desolate.

John Mair, or Major, as his name was Latinized, who was resident at Christ's College for a few months in the early part of the 15th century, when the facts connected with the dissolution were within living recollection, says that the suggestion of converting the Nunnery into a College originated with Dr Stubs. The person indicated was no doubt William Chubbes, S. T. P., the first Master of the College, whose name occurs with a variety of spellings in the earliest deeds of the College.

Sherman, in his Latin History of the College, makes the statement, which has since been copied in other books about Cambridge, that by direction of the Founder the College was dedicated to the Blessed Virgin Mary, S. John the Evangelist and the glorious S. Radegund, and took its popular name of Jesus College from the conventual church which was dedicated to the Name of Jesus. For the latter part of this assertion there is not the slightest evidence. The testimony of the Nuns' muniments shows conclusively that the Nunnery, the parish and the lane were as late as the beginning of Henry VII's reign known simply by their old title of S. Radegund's, nor is there any ground for supposing that the church itself received a fresh dedication so long as the Nunnery existed. In the preamble to the Statutes which [1] It is scarcely worth while correcting the many errors in Fuller's account of the Nunnery, but it deserves to be mentioned that his jest, "Tradition saith that of the two [nuns] remaining one was with child, the other but a child," is based on the misreading of infamis in the letters patent as infans. Godwin had made the same mistake before Fuller, and infans is the reading wrongly given in Documents relating to the University and Colleges of Cambridge.

Bishop Stanley of Ely gave to the College in 1514 it is stated that the church of the College is consecrated to the Name of Jesus, and that the College is erected and founded in honour of the Blessed Virgin Mary, S. John the Evangelist and S. Radegund, but that it shall be called Jesus College and the Fellows and Scholars shall be called Scholares Jesu[1].

A Compotus roll for the year Henry VII, 13—14, i.e. 1497—8, apparently the first of the newly founded College, exists in the College Treasury. It throws an interesting light on the financial situation inherited by the College from the Nuns, though unfortunately it gives no information as to the condition of the conventual buildings. The Nunnery indeed is not once alluded to in it, nor is there any express acknowledgement of the fact that the Nuns' property had passed into new hands. The computant has no arrears to account for; in the margin, opposite the heading, 'Collegium Jhū' occupies the place of 'Prioratus Sc̄e Radegundis'; otherwise there is no recognition of the changes which had just occurred. The collector is one William Pykerell, who was a Fellow of the College soon after its foundation, but against many of the entries of receipts is set the name or initial of Griggeson, one of the original Fellows, who evidently helped in rent-collecting. Beyond payment of quit-rents, fifteenths, &c. and a few incidental expenses of collection there are no disbursements. There is however mention of certain sums of money, amounting in all to £9. 6*s*. 8*d*., paid to Henry Lecheman, who was another of the original Fellows. The purpose of these payments is not stated. They may have been connected with the building of the College, but the absence of fabric charges seems to show that the costs of adapting the conventual buildings to College uses were borne mainly by the Founder or his friends. There are no payments to College officials; neither Griggeson nor Lecheman is described as Fellow, and William Chubbes, who is mentioned, is not styled Master. A sum of £43. 8*s*. 8*d*. is advanced to John Ware of Fulburn for farm stock. An indenture of the same year (Henry VII, 14) shows that in consideration of this advance Ware released to the College a farm of 21 acres at Fulburn, of which the College gave him a lease for 8 years. The remaining balance, amounting to £25. 17*s*. 10¾*d*., is retained in the hands of Pykerell and Griggeson. The entries under the head of rent receipts show that the College receivers found the Nuns' affairs in a singularly chaotic state which they had not as yet succeeded in reducing to order. There is a long list of tenements whose rent is held over for the time owing to an uncertainty as to the sum, 'eo quod feodum ignoratum est.' Nine tenements in Jesus Lane return no rent, as being vacant. The former occupants seem to have been servants employed by the Nuns.

[1] There seems to have been some uncertainty at first as to the formal title of the College. In the King's letters patent it is described as 'Collegium Beatissime Marie Virginis, Sancti Johannis Evangeliste et Gloriose Virginis Sancte Radegundis.' But in an address of the Master, William Chubbes, and Fellows to the King, of which there is a transcript in the Ely Episcopal Registers (Alcock, fol. 125), belonging apparently to the year 1497, it is called 'Collegium Jesu, Beate Marie Virginis et Sancti Johannis Evangeliste.' Popularly the College seems from the first to have been known only as Jesus College. The name Jesus Lane occurs in the town accounts of 1497: Jesus church and Jesus parish are mentioned in documents of the early years of the 16th century, though, inconsistently enough, there is mention of the parish church of S. Radegund in cap. 19 of Bishop Stanley's Statutes. The original College seal, of which an impression exists in the College Treasury attached to a deed temp. Henry VIII., bears the legend, SIGILLVM COLLEGII IHV: MARIE ET IOHIS: EVAG. CANTEBR. In its upper portion are represented under canopies the Virgin and S. John standing on either side of the Saviour, and the base displays a shield bearing the Five Wounds. Archbishop Rotherham's foundation of Jesus College, Rotherham, dates from 1498. Rotherham was Lord Chancellor conjointly with Alcock, and appointed him executor of his will. He was also provost of the collegiate church of Beverley, Alcock's native town.

As late as the year 1511 among the inmates of the Benedictine Nunnery of Davington, Kent, at the time of its visitation by Archbishop Warham, was one Elizabeth Awdeley, who had been professed at Cambridge. As she had been resident at Davington for 20 years she must have been one of the sisters who abandoned S. Radegund's before its dissolution[1].

The name and memory of the Nuns' house were still perpetuated at the beginning of the present century in the manor of S. Radegund and the Radegund tithes, and with the former was still associated another survival of Nunnery days, the fair on the festival of the Assumption. The manor and the fair have long since passed away: the tithe, attenuated into a formal payment of insignificant amount, still exists. All three institutions in their origin were rooted in the beginnings of the Nunnery, and I have thought it on that account worth while to put together here the few noteworthy facts concerning them which I have been able to discover.

The manor of S. Radegund consisted of the old demesne lands of the Nuns, and generally its boundaries coincided with those of S. Radegund parish, but it did not include the dwelling-houses in Jesus Lane. As the Nuns did not let it to tenants it was not styled a manor in their time, nor was there on it any dwelling of the nature of a manor-house. The old manor-house of S. Radegund, which stood nearly on the site of the present All Saints' vicarage, was destroyed in 1831. Its last tenant was the Rev. Isaac Leathes, a former Fellow of the College, who parted with the remainder of his lease of the manor to the College in Dec. 1830. To his descendant, the Rev. Prof. Stanley Leathes, now an Honorary Fellow of Jesus College, I am indebted for the loan of a water-colour sketch of the house, taken from the north, of which the engraving opposite is a reproduction. An aged servant of the College, recently deceased, who well remembered the old manor-house, described it to me as being, just before its demolition, in a dilapidated state, and the garden as a wilderness. Near the end of the grounds where Manor Street has since been built the same authority told me that there was a handsome fountain. The two projecting wings of the house are shown in the sketch to be red brick; the central portion was apparently stuccoed.

Fig. II. The Manor House of S. Radegund.

In the first College lease book there is a transcript of a lease of the manor, dated 1555, in which it is stated that the manor-house had then been newly built by Mr Edmund Perpoynte, Master of the College, at his own charge, amounting to £400[1]. It took the place of an older house which recently had been 'utterly burnt by casualtie of fire.' All the dominical lands were included in this lease with these exceptions—the ground enclosed within mud walls, commonly called the churchyard, all woods and underwoods, the inner court, the Master's and Fellows' gardens, and the close at the west side of the school house, i.e. the western part of the present Fellows' garden. As the ground occupied by the entrance court of the College was not excepted it is probable that the farm buildings in the Nuns' curia were still standing and in use, or others in their place. Except the gatehouse and school adjoining it no College buildings stood there.

The fair on the festival of the Assumption of the Virgin Mary was granted to the Nuns by charter of King Stephen. This charter is not now extant, but the fact is recorded in the Hundred Rolls[2]. The circumstance that the fair was held on the vigil and feast of the Assumption, i.e. August 14 and 15, seems to indicate, as already stated, that the Nunnery church was originally dedicated to S. Mary, but it is to be noted that Aug. 14 was also the day on which S. Radegund was commemorated. A third day was added to the duration of the fair by charter of Henry VI., dated the sixteenth year of his reign (Charters, 9).

The name Garlick Fair, by which it was generally known in its last days, occurs first in an entry in the Bursar's accounts for 1577–8.

[1] Bentham, History of Ely, Appendix, p. 46, mentions that in a window of the manor-house, in the year 1744, were blazoned the arms of Bishop Goodrich of Ely. Goodrich was Fellow of Jesus in 1510, and Bishop of Ely 1534—1554.

[2] H. R. II. p. 359, 'Item predicte Priorissa et Moniales habent quandam feriam ad festum Asumpcionis Beate Marie Virginis duraturam per duos dies, sc. in vigilia Asumpcionis Beate Marie cum die sequenti quam quidem feriam habent ex concessione Stephani quondam Regis Anglie per cartam quam habent de Rege predicto.'

"for ledding ij payns in the sowth wyndowe there (i.e. in the chapel) next to the garlicke fayre closse, &c., iij*s.* vj*d.*"

The close here referred to and otherwise known as 'the churchyard' occupied the position of the eastern portion of what is now the Master's garden, on the southern side of the chapel. It was entered by gates opening on Jesus Lane. In the Nuns' accounts for 1449–50 there is a charge of 12*d.* for a lock and key for these gates ('pro portis vocatis feyregates'). They stood on the site of the still existing wooden door on the western side of the iron gates through which the new approach from Jesus Lane to the Chapel Court is entered. As late as 1803 this gate was described by the then Bursar as 'Garlic Fair Gate.' The churchyard was enclosed with mud walls dividing it on one side from the Master's garden, on the other from the 'Master's close,' or 'pond yard.' Probably the fair had been held there from the first, but after the inclusion of the site in the Master's garden it seems to have been transferred to the western margin of the College close, adjoining the King's Ditch, where it gave its name to Garlic Fair Lane, now Park Street.

As a trade mart the fair seems never to have had any importance. Though the Nuns and, after them, the College in its earlier days were considerable buyers at both Midsummer and Sturbridge fairs, and on occasions even resorted to S. Audrey's fair at Ely, they seem never to have marketed at the fair which was held in their own grounds. The tolls received by the Nuns in 1449–50 amounted only to 5*s.* 2*d.*, and in the following year to 5*s.* In the earlier year the toll collectors received 6*d.* as wage; a cook hired to help in the kitchen at the fair time also received 3*d.* In the 16th and earlier part of the 17th century the profits of the fair, including 'waiffs and straythes,' were regularly included in the lease of the manor. After 1635 there appears in the accounts an annual entry of £1 received as profits of the fair, which, with not unfrequent omissions in the later years, continues until 1709, after which it ceases[1]. But until 1838, when the manorhouse was destroyed and the close thenceforth let on an annual tenancy, in every lease of the manor there was a covenant that the College 'shall have liberty to keep a fair within and over the close, or such part thereof as hath been used for that purpose, on the feast day of the Assumption of the Blessed Virgin Mary yearly, or at such other time or times as it may keep the same.' The fair seems to have been still in existence at the beginning of the present century, about which time Bowtell writes (MSS. pp. 205—11), 'On the 14th, 15th and 16th August this Fair is still constantly observed by the Inhabitants of Jesus Lane, who claim it as a Privilege belonging peculiarly to their Situation and invite Strangers to partake of their Festivity in strong ale and cheerless (sic) Frumenty. But these Meetings are now attended with far less Rejoicings than they were formerly, when Minstrels and Musicians were engaged to heighten the celebration,' &c. The New Cambridge Guide, published in 1809, speaks ambiguously of its existence at that date. 'There was formerly another festival, called Garlick Fair, celebrated here; which was granted by Henry VI. to the Nuns of St Radegund, and held in Jesus Lane, on the 14th of August and two following days; but this is now nearly abolished.'

The Radegund tithes were commonly leased by the College to the tenant of the manor. Like the tithes of all the Cambridge churches they were drawn from the common fields of the town. These fields, tilled by the possessors on the open field system, extended on all sides round the town as far as the borough limits. The fields on the north and west sides of the town were collectively known as Cambridge fields, and on their inner side were bounded by a watercourse extending from Queens' Green to the Bin Brook, and from thence by the Bin Brook to its junction with the river. The fields on the south and east sides of the town were anciently known as Barnwell fields; their inner boundary coincided generally with the course of the King's Ditch from the point where it leaves the river at the King's Mill to the place where it rejoins it at the angle of Jesus Green. The Cambridge and the Barnwell fields were to the last cultivated as distinct, and separate Acts of Parliament were required for their enclosure, the former in 1802, the latter in 1807. Both Acts contained provisions for making allotments in lieu of tithes, but the great tithes belonging to Jesus College in the Barnwell fields were specially retained in the Act of 1807, and, as 'Radegund tithes,' exist at the present day. The tithes of Cambridge fields were known as the tithes of S. Giles and the tithes of S. Radegund, the former apparently including the parishes of S. Giles, S. Peter and All Saints next the Castle, the churches of which were appropriated to S. Giles' Priory, Barnwell, while the latter would represent the tithes of S. Clement's, which belonged to the almoner of S. Radegund's Priory. The tithes of Barnwell fields on the other hand belonged exclusively to the southern parishes. The old tithe books show that they belonged to the churches of S. Andrew the Great, S. Mary next the Market, S. Mary the Less, S. Bene't and the Holy Trinity, to the almoner of Barnwell Priory, as impropriator of S. Edward's, S. Sepulchre's, S. John's and S. Botolph's, and to S. Radegund's Nunnery, in right, no doubt, of All Saints' Church in Jewry. In a printed report of an action (Anderson v. Broadbelt) which took place in 1816, with respect to the right of Jesus College to the Radegund tithe in Barnwell fields, it is stated that 'the Inhabitants of All Saints' parish in perambulating their boundaries had uniformly included the fields of Barnwell in consequence of their right to the Rates on those Tithes.'

THE BUILDINGS OF THE NUNNERY.

The scope of the Architectural History in the chapters dealing with Jesus College, except in the case of the Chapel, does not include any detailed account of the Nunnery buildings. Though such an account was outside the plan adopted by the authors in the case of other colleges it is matter for much regret that Professor Willis left no notes for the treatment of this subject, on which he could have written with the authority of a master.

In the preamble to the Statutes of Nicholas West, Bishop of Ely 1515–1533, the statement is made that the College was 'paene ab ipsis fundamentis noviter aedificatum et constructum' by the Founder himself. Apparently the construction to be put upon the words 'noviter aedificatum' is that from the ground-floor upwards Alcock reconstructed the Nuns' buildings in such a way as to give them the appearance of being new; unless the expression is inaccurate it cannot mean that a new fabric was raised on the old foundations. The former, at least, is the only interpretation which can be reconciled with what is known of Alcock's operations in the case of the Chapel; it corresponds equally with the facts brought to light by recent discoveries connected with the domestic buildings occupying Nunnery sites. It is probable enough, though the fact is not stated in the royal letters patent, that the Nuns left their dwellings in such a state of disrepair as to be scarcely habitable; that was an incident common to college as well as monastic buildings, and as late as the reign of Edward VI. the Bursars' accounts show that a considerable number of chambers were unoccupied 'per defectum reparacionis.' But the poverty and neglect of a quarter of a century which, no doubt, had made havock of thatched roofs and stud-partitions could have had little effect on the outward walls of solid clunch, which, under a facing of later brick, still testify to the durability of the work of the Nunnery builders, and Alcock had too much practical skill to destroy buildings which could easily be adapted to the needs of a college, and harmonized to 15th century fashions in architecture. In the Refectory, in the whole of the ranges occupying the eastern and western sides of the cloister, and in their prolongations northwards into the third or kitchen court the walls of the Nunnery still rise to their original height. Alcock, or the builders who succeeded him, cased them with brick, and, as a third storey was added to the two in which the Nunnery for the most part was contained, it was necessary to heighten the whole structure with a few feet of brickwork. A flat roof having been substituted on the chapel for one of high pitch the opportunity was taken of bringing the roofs of all the buildings which surround the cloister to a uniform level. In interior arrangement Alcock worked with a somewhat freer hand, but with some help from documentary evidence it is not difficult beneath his alterations and those of later times to trace the plan of the Nunnery and to locate its principal parts.

The documents which serve this purpose are:

(1) The accounts of the Nunnery Treasuresses, printed on pp. 145–178.

(2) The statutes of Bishop Stanley (circa 1514), which contain some interesting details as to the chambers assigned to the various inmates of the College.

(3) The College Bursars' accounts.

The earliest volume of the Bursars' accounts dates from 1557, from which year they are continued in uninterrupted succession to the present time. The authors of the Architectural History have largely availed themselves of the materials contained in these volumes. They do not appear to have been acquainted with the existence of a series of Bursars' Computus rolls, some on vellum, others on paper, beginning with the year 1534–1535, and continuing thence to 1548–1549. Unlike the later accounts these rolls are written in Latin and contain no details of expenditure on repairs and building. But for our purpose they have a special importance in that they contain a complete Rental of the chambers in the College, specifying their locality and mentioning, besides the camerae of the Fellows and students, the offices of the College which were not subject to rent. The apartments which they enumerate are those occupying the four sides of the cloister-court, together with those contained in the building which continues the eastern cloister range at the east end of the Hall and into the third court, and the Kitchen range at the west end of the Hall. The chambers allotted to the Master are not stated in detail, and there is no mention of any buildings in the entrance court, except on its eastern side.

It is unfortunate that the Nunnery accounts give us hardly any information which will help us to realise the appearance, or determine the situation, of the various monastic offices. Besides the church the only buildings mentioned in them are the Refectory, the Aula (i.e. the Guest or Cellarer's Hall), the chamber over the outer gates, the Hospicium (a general term for all the buildings external to the cloister—brewing and candle-making were carried on there), the Latrina, the Kitchen, the Cow-house, the Malt-kiln, the Garner (Orreum) and the Barn (Granatorium). The Infirmary and Chapter-house are referred to in several deeds. Of the Dorter, the Parlour, the Warming-house, the Sacristy and the Lodging of the Prioress the Nunnery documents make no mention.

Before proceeding to the buildings grouped about the cloister we may in few words say all that is known of the outer yard or curia of the Nunnery. With the authors of the Architectural History we may fairly certainly assume that it occupied the position of the entrance court of the College. The accounts for the year 1449–50 mention certain 'magnas portas exteriores' with a building (domus) adjoining them, which in that year was thatched with sedge. In the following year's accounts is an item for reeds for the repair of the chamber 'desuper portas exteriores huius monasterii.' As there seems to have been only a single chamber above these gates it would appear that the entrance was not marked by any tower, and resembled the gateways of the older colleges, such as Pembroke and Corpus[1]. The Gatehouse no doubt occupied the position of the present Gate-tower, and was approached from the road by the passage which is now known as 'the Chimney[2].' This passage served also as an approach to the door at the west end of the Nave, which was the entrance to the Church for the parishioners. On its east side was the churchyard.

On the west side of the gate in the earliest College days existed a small building of two storeys (plan, S) which was the grammar-school, founded by the Lady Katherine, widow of Sir Reginald Bray. Sherman states that the school-house was built by the latter; but as the deeds relating to the foundation do not state the fact it must be regarded as to some extent doubtful. Possibly Sir Reginald Bray merely adapted one of the Nunnery buildings, perhaps the Almonry, for the purpose.

On the east side of the Gate Tower is a wing of the Lodge, containing the dining-room on the ground floor (plan, Q). The Statutes of Bishop Stanley show that this wing was occupied by the Master in the first years of the existence of the College. During alterations to the Lodge which were carried out in the course of the year 1886 two window arches were discovered on the inner side of the northern wall of the dining-room (plan, k, k'). They were narrow and lofty, the crown reaching two or three feet above the ceiling. Unfortunately they were covered before any notes or drawings were made of them, but it is sufficiently clear that they must have been blocked early in the 16th century, as three windows of that date have been inserted in the wall. The loftiness of the apartment which they lighted shows that it must have been one of some dignity, and its contiguity to the Lodging of the Prioress suggests that it may have been the Guest Hall of the Prioress. At the N.W. corner of this room is a blocked doorway opening on the passage under the Gate-tower. In the Statutes of Bishop West (chap. 10) it is provided that the Master's servant shall act as exceptor or janitor. A corresponding arrangement may have existed in the Nunnery: it is at least noteworthy that Jesus is the only Cambridge College in which the Lodge adjoins the Gate.

The Bursars' Rentals already mentioned always begin their enumeration of the College chambers with those which are described as being in 'le North Corner Claustri desuper le Coolehouse.' Next follow those at the east end of the Hall and on the east side of the cloister-court, and then successively those on the south side of the cloister, 'next the west end of the Church,' and those on its west and north sides. There is no mention of staircases, but the rooms are distinguished in the order 'lower,' 'middle' and 'upper.' Each chamber may be readily localized, as there has been practically little alteration of the internal arrangement of this part of the College since the first half of the 16th century.

The 'North Corner' of the cloister mentioned in the Bursars' Rolls is manifestly that portion of the range on the E. side of the cloister which is continued on the N. side of the Hall, and is now known as staircase K. At the extremity of this range, next the modern (1822) building which continues it northwards, there is a low wooden door on the ground-level, which opens on a flight of steps descending about 4 ft. 6 in. below the present ground-surface outside. Descending these steps we find ourselves in what resembles a narrow passage (plan, A), flanked on either side by clunch walls about 4 ft. apart and closed at its further end by the E. wall of the range. The floor of the adjoining rooms on the first floor of staircase K is carried across the passage, so that those rooms are larger than those below them by the space contained between the walls. The wall opposite the door of entrance is pierced by a very small aperture at the height of 12 ft. from the ground on the inner side. From the parallel walls spring the remains of ancient brick arches which have formerly spanned the vault.

In this hardly altered relic of the Nunnery it is easy to recognise the conventual latrina mentioned in the accounts of 1450–1451. It continued to be used for the same purpose at least as late as 1567–8. In the accounts of that year it is distinguished as 'the olde privye' from a new 'howse of office' which was then being built in the same quarter of the College[1].

The floor of the latrina consists of natural gravel, almost undisturbed. The channel of which it was the bed was conducted from the fons often mentioned in the Nuns' accounts. This fons, which furnished the water supply of the Nunnery, is still represented by a disused pump on the N. side of the Hall (plan, B), which gave its name to the 'Pump Court,' as the third court of the College was till recently called. From this fons, which perhaps was an open trough or cistern, an open channel, called in the accounts of 1572–3 'ye kytching sinke ditche,' or 'the Bog-house ditch' (1650–1), traversed the court in the direction of the latrina. In the accounts for 1708–9 are charges for 'covering in ye drayn from ye kitchen and pump.' Beyond the latrina the ditch passed into a 'pit' or 'pond.'

As the latrina in monasteries adjoined the Dorter it is fairly certain that the latter was contained in the range of which the latrina and the N. transept of the Church are the extremities. Like all monastic dormitories it was on the upper floor, and was probably divided in the manner described in the Rites of Durham by transverse partitions of wainscote into a double row of chambers, each lighted by a window in the wall adjoining. In the staircase in the N.E. angle of the cloister may be seen a wall recess which appears to mark the position of one of these windows, consisting of a single narrow light (plan, a).

[1] As there were two distinct sets of shafts descending to the ditch from the closets above, one set in front of the other, like those found in medieval buildings of more than two storeys, it would appear that there were two upper storeys of closets, and that consequently the E. range of the cloister to which these closets formed the termination was, in this part at least, arranged in three storeys. The clunch wall at the N. is carried up to the present roof.

The Dorter seems to have extended over the Chapter-house, but not so far as to the gable-wall of the N. transept. The surmise of the authors of the Architectural History that the Nuns had an access from the Dorter to the transept by the circular staircase, or 'vice,' in the N.E. angle of the latter is devoid of foundation. The unaltered wall on the Dorter side of this 'vice' shows no trace of a doorway, and the narrow and dark stair would be a most inconvenient means of entering the church. There is indeed in the N.W. angle of the transept a door, now blocked (plan, b), which may very likely have admitted the Nuns from the Dorter without the necessity of passing through the cloister. But, as at first designed, the Dorter clearly did not abut on the transept. The cills of the triplet of Norman windows in this wall are at such a height as to make it clear that there was no building next it on the level of the upper floor. As moreover the 'vice' has a narrow aperture in the same wall, above the first floor level, designed to light the stairs, it can only have had a ground-floor building next it on the N. side. This building (plan, G) probably contained a staircase descending from the Dorter to the transept door[1].

At its N. end the Nuns' Dorter must have been closed by the wall which extends the line of the N. wall of the Hall. This is now the only transverse wall of solid masonry in the range, and unquestionably is of Nunnery date. But it is only on the ground floor that it appears as a continuous wall of clunch. On the upper floors the portion of it nearest the Hall, 10 feet in breadth, is merely a stud-partition with a thin clunch wall on the ground floor below; in the eastern portion the thicker clunch continues to the full height of the Dorter. Here the Nunnery arrangement seems to be practically unaltered. The space next to the E. wall of the

[1] The clunch wall of the cloister between the Chapter House and the N. transept was stripped of its plaster in 1894, and was seen to consist of rough materials of all kinds, including a half-worked Norman capital. It bore no trace of either door or window. But there was nothing to show that the exposed face was more than a refacing of post-Nunnery date.

Refectory, having no windows to light it, was perhaps not used for sleeping chambers, and served as a passage to the latrina and the room next the Dorter on its N. side (plan, C). This room, if the usual monastic arrangement was followed, may have been the Dorter of the Novices. Above it, as already shown, there was a room on the second floor.

The arrangement indicated above remained very little altered in the 16th century, as is shown by documentary evidence of that date. I shall not apologise for quoting this evidence, as in interesting details it illustrates the continuity of collegiate with monastic life which was, perhaps is, a feature distinguishing Jesus from other Cambridge colleges.

The existence of a chamber of more than ordinary importance, next to the latrina, is indicated by cap. 28 of Bishop Stanley's Statutes. This statute, which gives particular directions as to the assignment of chambers in the College, contains the following clause:

"Omnes camerae (exceptis tribus de principalioribus, camera videlicet ex parte boreali summi Altaris, camera ad occidentalem partem Aulae quam modo Mr Fitzherbert inhabitat et camera proxima communem latrinam quam modo Mr Ogle tenet quas volumus pro venerabilioribus personis ad Collegium nostrum praedictum confluentibus custodiri) nisi alias magistro placuerit, praefatis sociis, perhendinantibus et scholaribus per praefatum magistrum distribuantur."

As regards the last of the chambers indicated, that, namely, which adjoined the latrina, the directions of the statute seem generally to have been observed in the 16th century. During the years 1544–1550 it was occupied by a certain Mr Badcocke, who is probably to be identified with John Badcocke, the last prior of Barnwell, who surrendered his house to the crown in 1538 and was subsequently incumbent of S. Andrew's the Less, Barnwell[1]. In 1572 it was occupied by Lord Wharton, and in 1576–9 by Bancroft, afterwards Archbishop of Canterbury, who, though distinguished as a tutor, and, as a continuator of Sherman's Historia observes,

[1] Cooper, Athenae Cantab., Vol. I. p. 219.

'potestate plane magistrali pollens,' was never a Fellow of the College. The Bursars' Rentals of 1535–1550 show certain circumstances connected with this guest-chamber which distinguish it from other rooms in the College. As a matter of fact it consisted of two chambers, on the middle and upper floor respectively, and the tenant also sometimes rented the coal-house below them. Each of the chambers is called a 'half-chamber' (medietas camerae), but, as the tenant paid for each the same rent as other tenants on the same floors, it would seem that the half-chambers were not inferior in size to ordinary College chambers. The explanation of the designation 'half-chamber' seems to lie in the fact that a portion of the middle and upper floor-space was required for the passage connecting this quarter of the College with the rooms in the upper floors of the eastern cloister-range. This passage, here about 8 feet wide, is still to be distinguished in the gyp-rooms of the four upper chambers at the N. end of the range, which, unlike those on the lower floor, are of substantial masonry. The passage on the second floor was entered from the chamber, now a lumber-room, at the E. end of the Hall through a wooden doorcase, of 16th century design, set in the stud-wall already mentioned as continuing the N. wall of the Hall. This stud-wall apparently did not exist in the Nunnery or early College days, for in the angle next the oriel of the Hall there was formerly, on each of the upper floors a window, the upper one of smaller size, so splayed as to light the dark portion of the passage extending along the E. wall of the Hall[1]. At the end of this passage, on the top floor and over the latrina, there is a very small chamber, approached through a stone door-case and lighted from the third court by a diminutive window. Its

[1] These windows now exist only as cupboard recesses on the inner side of the wall. But externally they may be recognized by the brick which has been used for blocking them being of a different colour from the rest of the wall. In the highest storey of the building next the W. end of the Hall there is still a passage which leads from the N. wall of the range, over the kitchen as far as the N.W. angle of the cloister-court, and in the N. and S. ends of the gable wall of the Hall there are small windows splayed in the manner above described.

Apart from the convenience of a covered approach to the latrina, the passage was rendered necessary by the fact that the gate leading from the Nuns' cloister to the third court was always locked at night. The frequent mention in the Bursars' accounts of purchases of keys and repairs to the lock of the "cloisters gate" seems to show that in the earlier College period no egress was permitted at night beyond the cloister-court.

The description in the Bursars' Rolls of this quarter of the College as the 'North Corner Claustri' is an indication of the fact, otherwise established by entries in the Audit books, that a cloister-walk existed here in the 16th century, as, no doubt, had been the case in Nunnery times. The Audit books call this 'the cloister end,' and it adjoined 'the woodyard[1].' It was otherwise described as a 'lane' or 'gallery[2],' both of which words were once used to denote a cloister-walk[3]. This external cloister was an extension of the eastern walk of the cloister-quadrangle, with which it communicated by a passage under the dais of the Hall (i.e. the Refectory), an arrangement common in monasteries. This passage remained in use at least as late as 1648–9, when it was known as the 'Dark Entry[4],' the name which was given at Canterbury to the covered way which led under the Dorter from the Great Cloister to the Infirmary. It was entered from the cloister quadrangle through a door-case which now gives access to the staircase in the N.E. angle of the court. This staircase is called in the Bursars' accounts of last century 'the Parlour staircase' from the circumstance that it then gave access to the Combination Room through a door, now blocked, on the first floor. It is generally known in College as 'Cow Lane.' The latter name was given to a passage next the Porter's lodge in the Old Court of King's College. Perhaps it was originally applied to the Dark Entry, which was entered from the cloister through the same doorway as the staircase, 'lane' being, as already stated, one of the names by which the passage to the 'house of office' was known. A more modern door under the oriel of the Hall marks the exit of the Dark Entry on the outer side. The clunch walls flanking the passage still remain in the Buttery beneath the Hall, though the central portion of each has been removed in order to give uninterrupted communication with the cellar beyond, and the passage has been blocked by recent walls at either end.

The room on the E. side of the Dark Entry (plan, F), now a cellar, was entered from it by a door of which traces remain in the clunch wall. In the early part of the 16th century this room, as well as the Combination Room and garret above it, was occupied as an ordinary college-chamber. The present floor of the cellar is three feet lower than the pavement of the cloister walk, but its original level was higher, as is shown by the position in the E. wall of a window, now blocked, and in the N. wall of a fireplace. The latter has a nearly flat arch plainly chamfered in the clunch: on its eastern side is a small locker. We may conjecture that this room was the Nuns' Common House or Calefactory.

On the inner side of the E. wall of the cloister, directly facing the northern walk, there may be seen a wide and plainly chamfered arch of stone (plan, c). Its crown has been cut away to make the window looking into the cloister. If the S. wall of the room which we conjecture to have been the Common House was in line with the S. wall of the Refectory, there can only have been space between it and the Chapter House for a passage. It seems probable, therefore, that this archway was the entrance to the passage from the cloister to the Garden and the Cemetery. The burial-ground of the Nuns was pretty certainly at the N.E. end of the Church, that of the parish at the S.E. end; human remains were dug up on the former site in 1884, and on the latter in the years 1848–50.

The circumstances which led to the remarkable discovery in April 1893 of the beautiful arcade which was the cloister-front of the Chapter House need not here be detailed. Subsequent excavations carried on in July 1894 brought to light the lower courses of the walls of the eastern portion of the Chapter House projecting into the Chapel Court. These excavations showed that the Chapter House measured 37 feet by 25 feet. At the N.E. and S.E. angles there was a pair of buttresses of slight projection which showed that the building was of early 13th century date. Running along the eastern wall on its inner side was a stone bench. The whole of the west end was occupied by three arches, the middle one forming a doorway, and those at the sides containing each a window of two lights with a quatrefoil above. The arches and tracery spring from rich clusters of detached shafts, most of the capitals of which are carved with foliage, while a few are moulded. Two capitals in the northernmost pier are remarkable. They themselves are finished, but their design would seem to have been suggested by an unfinished carved capital. One of the annulets which divide the longer shafts broke at some time, and a continuous shaft was substituted for the two lengths. It will be noticed that there was no door in the entrance, and no shutters or glass in the windows. During the excavations at the east end there were found a number of fragments of lancet windows divided by small shafts. These are of the same period as the other remains of the Chapter House, and it is probable that they are parts of the eastern window.

They are now preserved on the floor within the entrance. A low stone bench (plan, d) extends along the cloister wall from the Chapter House towards the north transept. A tombstone with floriated cross, possibly not in its original position, lies before the entrance; the partial excavation of the site brought to light no tombstones within the Chapter House.

The existing portions of the conventual church have been so fully described by Professor Willis[1] that it is sufficient here to record the few facts which have been discovered since he wrote.

The statute of Bishop Stanley quoted on p. 60 mentions a chamber on the northern side of the High Altar which was set apart for the use of distinguished guests of the College. In the summer of 1894 the foundations of a small building were discovered on the north side of the presbytery (plan, H). This building was of the same width as the adjoining choir-aisle and in length extended from the east end of the latter to the east end of the presbytery. Whether it communicated with the aisle or not it is impossible to say, for the old aisle was destroyed by Alcock: but it seems to have been entered from the presbytery by a door now blocked (plan, e). The building was clearly of two storeys, for there is a small loop-hole or squint high up in the presbytery wall, which was so directed that the light before the High Altar could be seen from the upper storey (plan, f). Probably this upper room was the Sacristan's chamber. It must obviously have blocked up the lower parts of the lancet windows in the north wall of the presbytery[2].

The discovery of a Norman arcade on the western wall of the north transept in the summer of 1882 is briefly alluded to in the Appendix to the second volume of the Architectural History and is more fully detailed in a communication to the Antiquarian Society by Mr W. M. Fawcett, M.A.[3] [2] It may here be mentioned that previously to 1828 only four lancet windows were open on the north side of the presbytery, corresponding to the four in the opposite wall. The fifth lancet on the north side, and the blind half-arch next it, were discovered in that year by the Rev. C. Green, M.A., Dean.

[1] Architectural History, II. pp. 122—141.

There is good reason for believing that the choir of the Nuns' church extended into the nave, and even that the present west wall of the Chapel stands in the position, if it be not the actual structure, of the wall which divided the conventual from the parochial part of the church. An early deed (Charters, 220 c) grants a rent of eight shillings 'for maintenance of a lamp in the choir of the nuns, wheresoever their choir shall be,' words which imply that the ritual choir was not limited to the chancel. Alcock's screen, on the other hand, if we may judge from the mention in the Audit accounts for 1560—1 of a 'barre at the chansell dore,' would seem to have occupied the position of the present one. The view that the Nuns' choir-screen was near the western end of the Chapel perhaps derives some support from the fact that in digging for the supports of the new organ gallery in 1888 a large earthenware vessel, 13 inches in height, was discovered a few inches below the pavement. It was empty and may have served as a 'resonator,' such as in the middle ages were sometimes placed under organs and stalls, e.g. at Fountains Abbey.

The hope expressed by the authors of the Architectural History (vol. II, p. 128) that a fine western door might at some time be discovered in the western wall of the old nave received a fulfilment, unfortunately only partial, in the year 1886, when the lower portion of the northern jamb of this door was discovered during alterations to the Master's Lodge. The remains disclosed showed that the jambs had been filled with clusters of detached shafts of the 13th century, like those in the entrance to the Chapter House. At the same time remains of some of the northern piers of the nave were found embedded in a wall of Alcock's work[1].

Inspection of the plan will show that the westernmost pier (plan, g) of the northern arcade of the nave is not, like the corresponding one on the opposite side, placed against the western wall of the church, but slightly advanced to the east.

[1] Mr J. W. Clark has kindly furnished me with a plan (made in 1886) showing these discoveries and the arrangement of the west end of the church. This I have employed in drawing the plan opposite p. 53.

Between this pier (g) and the western wall there seems to have been a doorway. Previous to the alterations which took place in this part of the Master's Lodge in 1886 the wall at the N.W. angle of the old nave was pierced on the ground-floor by a door which opened on a rectangular area (plan, J) containing a staircase which ascended to the first-floor rooms. The walls enclosing this area were of solid character and were carried to the full height of the building. That on its north side is a prolongation of the north aisle wall; that on the west is similarly an extension of the exterior wall of the western cloister-range and is parallel in direction with the western front of the church. Now the buildings which surround the cloister are all disposed in an exactly rectangular fashion; but the angle which the west cloister range makes with the south range of the entrance-court is not a right angle. It seems not improbable that the Nuns' gate-house was originally detached from the cloister-range. The hypothesis that the range connecting them was erected at a later date accounts for the unsymmetrical plan of the dining-room of the Lodge (plan, Q) the east and west walls of which are not parallel. The east wall of the dining-room was, on this supposition, once the external wall of a small tower-like structure projecting from the church at its N.W. angle. Loggan's view of the S. front shows just such a projection from the wing which contained the old nave. Like that wing it contained three storeys, whereas the wing between it and the gateway has only two. Further proof of the original connection of this quasi-tower with the church is seen in the fact that the battlements over the present nave and the part of the old nave now converted into domestic buildings, as shown by Loggan, are continued round the south and west sides of this projection. These battlements, we know, were the work of Sir John Rysley, who died in 1511[1]. Between 1718 and 1720 the wing of the Lodge next the gate was heightened by the addition of another storey, whereby the turret was completely smothered in external appearance, and, no doubt, at the same time the battlement above it was removed.

The ground floor of the structure above described (plan, J) obviously served as a vestibule to the church, to which the Prioress had access from her lodging in the western cloister-range by the entrance at the N.W. angle of the nave. From the account of the ceremonies attending the installation of a Prioress, given on pp. 38–9, we learn that after the publication of the election 'coram populo congregato,' i.e. probably in the parochial part of the nave, 'omnes sorores predictam Joannam electam duxerunt ad vestibulum ejusdem ecclesie ibidemque dimiserunt,' i.e. they conducted her to this vestibule and left her at the door of the lodging which she was to occupy as Prioress. The door was probably the still existing one (plan, h) by which the Hall of the Lodge is entered. On the first floor immediately above this door, and communicating with the room above this Hall, is another ancient door which, no doubt, was reached by a staircase ascending from the vestibule.

A common arrangement in monasteries of which the Head did not reside in a detached building was to place the Lodge of the Prior in the west side of the cloister next the Church. On the ground floor was placed his camera, or private chamber, above it his solar with an oratory adjoining. At Jesus the rooms in this quarter of the College, as shown by the Bursars' Rentals, were allotted from a very early period to the Master, and they lend themselves so exactly to the uses above-mentioned that it is highly probable that Alcock assigned to the Master of the College the dwelling which had formerly belonged to the Prioress. The large room on the ground floor next the vestibule (plan, K) is called in the Bursars' Rentals the camera Magistri. Since the publication of the Architectural History it has been restored very much to the dimensions and appearance which belonged to it in Alcock's time. The wooden partitions which divided it before the alterations of 1886 have been removed, the ceiling taken down and the joists of the floor above it exposed. These joists are coloured with vermilion and adorned with repetitions of the monogram IHS. On its north side this room is bounded by the passage (plan, L) which until last century was the approach from the entrance court to the cloister[1]. In the Bursars' Rentals this passage is simply called 'le Entre.' The handsome wainscoted room above the Master's chamber goes by various names in the Audit Books—the Conference Chamber, the Audit Room, the coenaculum Magistri and the Founder's Chamber. Probably the last name indicates that Alcock designed it for the use of himself and his successors in the see of Ely. It was probably the Solar or Guest Chamber of the Prioress. Next to it on the north side is a narrow chamber contained within the walls which flank the 'Entry' below, and approached by a door at the east end of the Conference Chamber. Though it is only eight feet in width this room is lighted by a large eastern window of three lights. This was clearly the Oratory of the Prioress. Sherman tells us in his Historia that Dr Reston, who was Master 1546—1549, converted this chamber into his private Oratory, and it continued to be used as the Master's Oratory as late as 1635[2]. In another passage Sherman informs us that the 'insignia' (? arms painted on glass) of Sir Reginald Bray (d. 1503) were in his time still to be seen in this Oratory.

The rest of the ground-floor of the western cloister-range is stated in the Bursars' Rentals to be occupied by two chambers let to students of the College, and a room beyond them to the north which was occupied by the Cook. The purposes which the two former chambers served in the Nunnery it is not easy to determine. One of them may perhaps have been the Parlour (Locutorium) where the Nuns were allowed to converse with visitors, or with servants and tradesmen on the business of the Nunnery; the other was not improbably the Cheker, or office of the Cellaress. The room in which the College Cook lived (plan, N) from the fact that there was no chamber over it—the space being occupied, as it still is, by the Library staircase—is easily identified with the passage by which at the present day the cloister is entered from the first court.

An interesting feature in this chamber is a low aperture (plan, j) in its north wall, opening into the room marked O in the plan and now serving as the Kitchen Office, but in early College days used as the pincerna or Buttery. This aperture is 16 in. wide and its apex is not more than 4 feet above the pavement of the passage, but the floor of the Buttery cellar on which it opens is 2 ft. lower than this pavement, though formerly, no doubt, level with it. On the side next the passage it is widely splayed, and a single hinge exists on which a shutter seems to have been hung. It is quite evident that this opening was not a window looking into an external court, for the walls of the old Buttery are of massive clunch and evidently Nuns' work of an early date. Moreover on the side of the cellar the aperture is flush with the wall surface, and shows no kind of recess nor any window jambs. West of the opening on this cellar side the wall has been plugged with lead as though for fixing some object of wood or iron.

In this singular opening we may recognise a contrivance like the Rota or Turn, which is thus described in Prof. Willis' History of the Monastery of Christ Church, Canterbury, (p. 39, note).

"The Turn or Rota is a contrivance employed in Nunneries, Foundling Hospitals, and elsewhere, and consists of an upright cylindrical box turning on an upright axis, and having an opening on one side only. It is fixed within or in front of an opening in a partition wall, so that a person on one side placing an object in the Turn can, by twisting the box half round, bring the object within the grasp of a second person on the other side, without either party seeing the other."

Prof. Willis gives a description of a cellar wall-hole of this kind at Christ Church Monastery, which, with a few differences, might be applied to that in the Cook's Chamber. The Cellarer, he says,

"was lodged at the end of the Refectory buildings, and in contact with the court of the Guesten-hall....Two doors in the western alley [of the cloister] lead to his territory, the one at the north end, opposite to the northern alley, the other near the south end. The first is remarkable for having at the left side a singular octagonal opening of sixteen inches diameter through the thickness of the wall, in the form of a horizontal spout, the middle of which is about four feet from the ground. It pierces the wall, narrowing to a circular form a foot in diameter at the back, where it appears to have opened into one of the Cellarer's offices.

"Milner, describing the remains of the conventual buildings at Winchester, mentions a small ornamented arch in a wall, which communicated with the buttery and the cellarage, and remarks, 'It is not improbable that here was what is called a Turn, by which the brethren who were exhausted with fatigue and thirst, might, with the leave of their superior, at certain times call for a cup of beer of the cellarer.' Our spout may have been a contrivance to carry out this indulgence. The opening from the cellarage at the back being contrived at right angles with the present opening, it is plain that the cup would be placed by the Cellarer's man within reach of the applicant and returned without mutual recognition. But at present there are no traces of the form of its termination inwards," &c.

The room called in the Bursars' Rentals the 'pincerna' (plan, O) served as the Buttery until the year 1579–1580 when a 'new buttrye' was constructed, apparently under the Hall. The accounts of 1563–1564 mention 'a doore betwene ye butleres chamber and ye kechine.'

In the upper floors of the part of the western cloister-range which extends from the Oratory to the wall between the Cook's chamber and the pincerna there are no partitions of solid masonry. The whole of the highest floor is now occupied by the Library. In its upper portion this room is probably Alcock's work, as seems to be shown by the use of brick in its lateral walls. But there is reason to believe that in this quarter of the Nunnery there was a large room occupying on the first floor the space which the Library now occupies on the floor above it. The usual monastic arrangement would place here the Guest House, or Lodging of the Cellaress.

In the Nuns' accounts for 1449–50 reference is made in the same item to repairs in the Aula (i.e. Hall of the Cellaress) and in the Kitchen, and for practical reasons there can be little doubt that these two departments were in close communication. The Aula then most likely occupied the space above the Nuns' Buttery. In its N. wall is contained the flue of the Kitchen range and in its N.W. corner, where the clunch of this wall ends and a wooden party wall closes the room, there was most likely a wooden staircase descending inside the Kitchen. The Kitchen, which, except for alterations by Alcock in the door and windows, is substantially the Kitchen of the Nuns, has always occupied the height of two storeys.

The means of access from the entrance-court to the Hall and Lodging of the Cellaress have now to be considered. The Nunnery accounts for the year 1450–1451 mention a 'Poorche' or 'Portecus prope Aulam.' The only side of the Aula detached from other buildings was the west: on the other sides there could not have been any door requiring the shelter of a porch. If the Lodging of the Cellaress reached, as we must suppose, to the N. wall of the present cloister entry, its door must have opened directly into the Guest Hall without any interposed staircase and landing. The staircase to the Guest Hall was therefore external to the building. We note that the same workman was engaged in 1450–1451 in mending with tiles and 'sclate' the 'Porch' and the cloister. Probably the so-called Porch was of the nature of a pentise, ascending by a covered stair to the first floor. The splendid Norman staircase of the New Hall at Canterbury is a familiar example of such an arrangement.

The chamber at the west end of the Hall, occupying the position of the old Guest Hall, it may be remembered, was one of the three principal chambers which by the statutes of Bishop Stanley were allotted to distinguished visitors to the College.

The passage from the cloister to the Kitchen was, in the Nunnery, as now, under the vestibule of the Refectory or Hall. The Kitchen door (hostium coquine) must have stood where Alcock's door now stands, and was nearly opposite a newel staircase which opened above on the platform outside the screen[1]. Above the entrance from the cloister was the small room which until 1875 was the College muniment room and in the Bursars' Rentals is called the Treasury (occupatur cum

[1] A plan of the west end of the Hall, previous to the alterations of 1875, which includes this staircase, is given in the Architectural History, II. p. 163.

Thesauro Ecclesie). It may have served the same purpose in the Nunnery.

The Bursars' Rentals mention two rooms under the Hall. The first had one door opening S. into the cloister and another N. next to the well. It was used for the storage of fuel (focalia). The other had a door opening E. in the 'entre' (i.e. the Dark Entry) and was 'le Storehowse.' The word staurus was more particularly applied to salted or dry fish. After the rooms under the Hall were converted into the 'new buttrye' we hear of a 'new fish-house,' which was in the Kitchen. It was placed over the 'leads,' i.e. the kitchen coppers, and hence was called 'ye house in ye leads.' It was between the outer wall of clunch on the N. side of the Kitchen and an inner parallel one of brick, the enclosed space being about six feet wide. The fish was piled on layers of sedge in a high stack, and to get at it there was a door in the brick wall now visible only on the side interior to the two walls. This door is at about the first floor level, and was reached from the Kitchen by 'a new ladder for ye fish house' (1584–1585). The Nuns appear to have stacked their fish in a similar fashion, if we may judge from the fact that several of them travelled by water to Lynn in 1450–1451 in order to buy salt fish and at the same time purchased a 'piece of timber called "a Maste" required for making a ladder.'

The Founder's skilful treatment of the Nuns' Refectory has given the Hall completely the appearance of a late 15th century building; but in no part of the College is it clearer that he left the fabric of the Nuns' building entire, inserting only new windows, heightening the walls and constructing a new roof. The extent to which he raised the walls is best seen in the garret over the Combination Room, where the clunch of the Refectory gable is surmounted by a brick addition four or five feet high at its middle part. The entrance to the Hall from the cloister was until 1875 through a door-arch of Alcock's time which opened into the space between the west gable of the Hall and the screen[1]. A flight of steps led thence to the vestibule of the Hall.

ON THE SOURCES OF THE PARKER COLLECTION OF MANUSCRIPTS AT CORPUS CHRISTI COLLEGE.

HISTORIANS, palæographers, and archæologists, will all agree that it is very important to determine the places in which ancient books were written or preserved. If we can trace the career of a manuscript from the scriptorium where it took shape to the library shelf on which it rests to-day, we may find that its history will throw light on the most unexpected matters. It may shew us the origin of a school of handwriting: it may explain the genesis of a type of text: or it may account for the presence of a particular element in the works of a famous writer. Some of the notable results gained by study of the history of individual manuscripts will appear as I proceed. They are probably sufficient to justify the rash attempt I have made to determine the original homes of the books comprising that famous collection, the Parker MSS. at Corpus Christi College. I say that my attempt is rash, because it is not to be expected that any one person should be capable of seizing upon and rightly appreciating all the indications which are significant and might be made to yield the information we seek. Still, it so happens that a very considerable proportion of the books in Archbishop Parker's collection can be assigned to their ancient homes with certainty, or with great probability; and, for the rest, I have noted such indications as may in the future enable myself, or other searchers in the same field, to fill up the gaps I have been forced to leave.

Several reasons have contributed to induce me to undertake this piece of work. Perhaps the most cogent is to be found in the kindness of Mr C. W. Moule, Librarian of the College, who made it possible for me to take every single volume, from no. 1 to no. 482, off the shelves, and examine it for traces of its provenance. And besides that, I am very anxious to set the example of treating a collection of MSS. in this particular way. At present the only considerable attempt in this direction with which I am acquainted is the list of provenances of MSS. given by the Rev. W. D. Macray in his Annals of the Bodleian Library: a list which though necessarily incomplete, is invaluable to the searcher after remains of our ancient libraries.

But, indeed, every one of the older collections of manuscripts in England ought to be analysed from the point of view of the provenance of its component parts. If we wish, as I imagine we do wish, to gain a clear and complete notion of the intellectual life of monastic England, we must know what books were in the hands of the monks in the various great centres of learning. And it will be just as instructive to ascertain what sort of libraries the smaller abbeys or priories possessed, as it is to study the books belonging to the larger communities. To attain this end we must have a Corpus of monastic catalogues: we must print and analyse the Catalogus scriptorum of Boston of Bury, and the probably earlier Tabula septem custodiarum: and we must also go through the old stores, such as the Cottonian, Royal, Harleian, Arundel, and Bodley MSS., and the College Libraries at Cambridge and Oxford, examining every volume and noting press-marks, names of mediæval and sixteenth century owners, and the opening words of the second leaf. It is, no doubt, a big piece of work: but my own slight experience has taught me that it is preeminently interesting—even exciting—and that all manner of pleasant discoveries, great and small, await him who is bold enough to embark upon it.

To come from the general to the particular; I have to explain the methods I have myself employed in examining the Parker MSS., and to gather up some of the results that I have obtained.

It must be stated at once that a very great deal of the material for identification has been irrecoverably lost. Nearly all the MSS. were rebound at the end of the last century, and with that rebinding away went all the evidence that might have been gleaned from old bindings, fly-leaves, or fragments of writing in the covers. The Parker Collection is not the only one in Cambridge which has suffered in this way. At Peterhouse, and at the University Library, equal havoc has been wrought in the past: but the loss is the more to be deplored in the case before us in view of the higher average value of the books concerned.

Not all, again, of my results are new. Nasmyth in his Catalogue notes the source of many of the MSS.: but the examination of a large number of MSS. in many libraries has furnished me with more material for identifying the books belonging to different monasteries than he had at his command.

In forming the list of manuscripts subjoined to this discourse, my principle of procedure has been as follows. I have not given a list of the contents of each MS., but only a short title: and I have uniformly noted the first words of the second leaf (called the dictio probatoria). The reason for this is, that in most monastic catalogues this detail appears: and thus volumes which I have failed to trace to their old homes may be identified in the future by means of such catalogues. Where Parker has bound up two or three complete MSS. together, I have noted the first words of the second leaf of each. Furthermore, I have not included in my survey the late paper MSS., of which there are so many in the Library. They are mostly collections of letters and statutes, or late treatises. Naturally these were never in monastic libraries at all. Nor do I notice the Wycliffite MSS.: for these were chiefly (though not in all cases) circulated among seculars.

Now among the Parker MSS. are some scanty relics of a collection previously possessed by Corpus Christi College. In 1439 Thomas Markaunt, Fellow, bequeathed to the College a library of 76 (75) volumes, which for upwards of a century were preserved with great care, under special conditions. A full Catalogue of these remains: it is no. 232 in Nasmyth. It has been already printed once for this Society, by Mr J. O. Halliwell in 1848: but I have thought it well to reprint it here. For, in his prefatory note, the last editor says, "It may be mentioned that in the original manuscript the incipits of the second and of the penultimate folios are given, but it has not been considered necessary to copy them." Much might be said about the wisdom of this remark; but I will omit any criticisms and merely say that I have copied the incipits in question, so that by their help we may be able to identify any of Markaunt's books which may be lurking in Cambridge or elsewhere.

At present only three of the 75 volumes, exclusive of the Catalogue, have presented themselves. Two are at Corpus Christi, and the third in the Registry. And here let me say a few words about the disappearance of the old libraries of Cambridge. We have in print catalogues of the old Libraries at Corpus Christi, Trinity Hall, King's, Queens', St Catherine's, and the University. At the present moment 19 of the University Library books are known to exist out of 330. At Corpus Christi, as I have said, 3 out of 75; at Queens', I believe, none; at King's, 1 out of 176; at Trinity Hall, 1; at St Catherine's none out of about 100. It is clear, also, from Leland's Collectanea that Clare College possessed in his time a large number of books, of which there is no trace now. Very similar is the case of Duke Humphrey's collection of 600 volumes, which he presented to the University of Oxford. Three of these volumes now remain in the Bodleian, and possibly a dozen may be in existence in other libraries. What does it all mean? Who is responsible for the wholesale destruction which these facts imply? I am afraid the answer is only too clear. We have to thank the Commissioners appointed under Edward VI. to reform the Universities. Something of their methods of procedure may be learnt from Mr Macray's Annals of the Bodleian Library. More can be inferred from the facts I have been citing.

I must turn now to the general results of the investigation of the Corpus Christi MSS. Out of the 482 volumes catalogued by Nasmyth it is possible to say something about the origin of nearly 200: further, we can set aside close upon 100 books as being late documents or Oriental MSS. So that about 180 of the vellum MSS. remain at present unassigned to any ancient monastic or private owner.

The largest contributors to the collection are the two Canterbury libraries—of Christ Church Priory and St Augustine's Abbey. I assign 47 volumes to the former and 26 to the latter. Next come—Norwich Priory with 18 volumes, Worcester with 9, Bury with a possible 7, Dover with 6, Exeter with 5: no other monastery contributes more than 4.

Let us take the Canterbury books first, and of them the contingent from Christ Church Priory. They include some of the most interesting in the library. As famous as any is the Anglo-Saxon Chronicle (No. 173) which, though it has lost its fly-leaves and class-mark, is on the strength of internal evidence unanimously allowed to be a Christ Church book; and indeed can be identified almost with certainty in the fourteenth century catalogue of the Christ Church Library. A new discovery,—the best, perhaps, that I have to show,—is this: No. 46, which contains the Polycraticus and Metalogicon of John of Salisbury, is the very copy which the author presented to St Thomas à Becket, to whom the former of the two treatises is dedicated. On the fly-leaf of this MS. is an inscription, erased but still legible, to the effect that it belonged to St Thomas, and the class-mark in the MS. corresponds accurately with the class-mark assigned in the old Christ Church catalogue to a copy of the two works bequeathed by St Thomas to the Priory. One result of this discovery is that the Corpus Christi MS. must be regarded in future as a primary authority for the text of the books it contains.

Another volume which belonged to an important personage is No. 76. It contains a copy of Radulphus de Diceto, and on the fly-leaf is written Annales Stephani Archiepiscopi. The owner was Stephen Langton: and like the one last-mentioned the volume is clearly identifiable in the old catalogue. To Canterbury again we can now assign the very handsome Psalter of the French Count Achadeus, written in 884 (No. 272), which is usually to be seen in a show-case in the College Library. The fly-leaves of this book are fragments of account-rolls wherein occur the names of several Kentish villages belonging as I believe to Christ Church.

Again, the Juvencus in uncials (No. 304) must, I have little doubt, be the volume described in an old fragment of a Christ Church catalogue as 'Juvencus in Romana scriptura.' This fragmentary catalogue is contained in a MS. in the University Library (Ii. 3. 12). It belongs to the end of the twelfth century, and has been printed, minus the class-marks annexed to each title, by Mr J. Bass Mullinger, in his History of the University (I. p. 102).

Let us look next at the contingent from St Augustine's Abbey. It is smaller, but it is extremely interesting; for it includes the uncial Latin Gospels with paintings which, if any, may be called Gregorian. This is numbered 286.

At this point let me digress. There is another fragment of a gospel-book in Celtic hand (No. 197) which used also to be called a Gregorian book. It gives no indication at present of any former habitat. But Bishop Tanner (Bibliotheca Britannica, s.v. Fœlix) speaks of it as having been the property of St Felix the Burgundian, the Apostle of East Anglia. His words are: "as to the Book of the Gospels, now in the library of Corpus Christi College, Cambridge, and formerly in the possession of the monks of Eye, see Leland, Collectanea, iii. 24." The book of which Tanner speaks must be one of the two "Gregorian" MSS., and he cannot, I imagine, have been unaware of the fact that No. 286 contains documents which prove indisputably that it belonged to St Augustine's, for Hickes and Wanley had printed them before he wrote.

We must next consult Leland. In the place mentioned by Tanner we read as follows:

Monachi Eyenses olim habebant cœnobiolum apud Dunwic, oppidum maritimum antiquitus Dunmoc dictum et civitatis nomine insigne, in quo Felix Orientalium Anglorum episcopus sedem habuit. Sed postquam alio sedes traducta fuit, veterem occupabant monachi. Nunc vero cœnobiolum (ut plura ibidem alia) a mare devoratum est. Eyenses adhuc servant Evangeliorum librum, relliquias exhausti cœnobioli; et a vulgo ruber liber de Eya vocatur, per quem apud vulgus solenne est iurare. Monachi constanter adfirmant librum fuisse Felicis, et certe verisimile est. Nam praeterquam quod sit scriptus litteris maiusculis Longobardicis, refert vetustatem mire venerandam.

The monks of Eye once had a cell at Dunwich, a town on the coast anciently called Dunmoc and distinguished by the name of city where Felix, Bishop of the East Angles, had his see. But when the see was transferred elsewhither, the old site was occupied by monks. Now, however, the cell (together with much else (or many others) in the place) has been swallowed up by the sea. The monks of Eye still preserve a Book of the Gospels, a relic of their ruined cell. It is popularly called the Red Book of Eye, and the people are wont to swear by it. The monks constantly affirm that it was Felix's book; and certainly that seems likely enough, for besides the fact that it is written in large (or capital) Lombardic letters, it has an appearance of wonderful great antiquity.

Leland, then, saw at Eye Priory a gospel book in "Lombardic" characters, known as the Red Book of Eye, which was believed to have belonged to St Felix, and had been brought from Dunwich. Now, by "Lombardic" letters we may be confident that Leland did not mean uncials. These he would be apt to call "Roman writing." He might on the other hand very well mean such a Celtic hand as our MS. (no. 197) is written in,—a hand which would not be so familiar to him, and which he would be likely to describe by a somewhat unusual word.

Have we, then, in this fragment a relic, or what was long thought to be a relic, of St Felix? The question deserves to be looked into. Tanner most unfortunately does not give any of the reasons which led him to speak as if the attribution of our MS. to St Felix were a well-known fact. That he does so speak of it you have heard: and I should be very glad to accept his statement if I could. Only I am afraid there is some evidence against his view. I have heard on very good authority that the Red Book of Eye which Leland saw was in possession of the municipal authorities of that town until quite recent times; and that, well within this century, perhaps even in this generation, it had been (by other hands, not those of the corporation) cut up for game-labels! Whether this last detail be true or not, it is obvious that the story cannot be reconciled with Tanner's assertion that the book or part of it was among the Parker MSS.

Further, there is a rival tradition as to the provenance of no. 197. In it is an inscription (by Parker) stating that it was one of the books sent by Gregory to Augustine and "lately thus mutilated." Moreover, it was generally held that a volume in the Cottonian collection (Otho, C. v), now destroyed, was a part of this same book. It contained the Gospels of Matthew and Mark, and this has parts of Luke and John. The Cottonian MS. was traditionally said to be a Gregorian book. It could not, of course, have been sent from Rome, for it is of Celtic origin: but the tradition of the Canterbury provenance may be a true one. In any case the modern story from Eye, coupled with this Canterbury tradition, stands in the way of our identifying the Corpus MS. no. 197 with the Gospels of St Felix.

A possible explanation of Tanner's assertion has occurred to me. It is conceivable that he has confused the Red Book of Eye with the Red Book of the Peak in Derbyshire. This latter is certainly at Corpus Christi. As was the case with the Book of Eye, people were wont to swear by it: indeed the belief was that whoever swore falsely upon it would run mad. It is true that the Derbyshire book is not a book of the Gospels, and that the mistake would be rather a careless one for Tanner: but I feel that it is a very possible one.

But one word more. Supposing that in spite of the objections adduced above, it should hereafter transpire that Tanner was right, and that no. 197 is the Red Book of Eye, or a fragment of it, it may be asked how it could have come about that a specimen of Celtic art such as this is should be found at Dunwich in Suffolk. As it happens, we can point to the presence of one rather famous Irishman in that part of the world and near the date of St Felix. I mean the seer of whom Bede tells us so much, St Fursey. And where there was one of that nation there may very well have been more.

We return to the books from S. Augustine's, meaning to digress again very soon. The handsome MS. of Homer (no. 81), written late in the fifteenth century, has a long note in it in Archbishop Parker's hand, to the effect that he found it in possession of a baker at Canterbury, who said that it came from St Augustine's Abbey. I take leave to doubt whether the baker was right, for I do not find, at St Augustine's, traces of Greek learning in anything like the same degree as at Christ Church. At the latter place Prior William Sellyng had a notable collection of Greek (and Latin) books which he had brought from Italy: and the baker may very easily have been mistaken as to which of the two Canterbury monasteries his Homer had come from.

To proceed. The Homer has on its title page, among other ornaments, the name ΘΕΟΔΩΡΟΣ in gold capitals on a blue ground, surrounded by a laurel wreath. Hence Parker concluded that it had belonged to the famous Archbishop Theodore, at the end of the seventh century. Nay, more, taking, I imagine, this particular MS. as his standard, he has written in several other Greek MSS. an inscription to the same effect. A xiiith century Psalter (no. 480), and a xvth century Euripides on paper (no. 403) at Corpus Christi, and a xivth or xvth century Psalter at Trinity College, are thus equipped, and, more astonishing still, a xvth century Cicero written in Italy in a Roman hand (no. 158) is assigned to Archbishop Theodore. This is sad work. The only value of these ridiculous inscriptions lies in the fact that they show pretty clearly that the books containing them must have come from Canterbury. And we cannot be far wrong in attributing their presence there to the influence of the scholar and humanist already mentioned—William Sellyng—whose real name seems to have been Tilley, Selling being merely the name of the Kentish village from which he came. The volumes I have mentioned are, I expect, nearly all waifs and strays from the Library he collected in Italy. The bulk of it perished, as is well known, in an accidental fire on the occasion of Dr Leighton's visit to the priory of Christ Church.

The subject of Greek learning in the middle ages is always interesting, and there is another book at Corpus Christi which has a bearing thereupon. This is a Psalter of the xiiith century (no. 468) in which the Latin and Greek versions—both in Latin letters—are written in parallel columns. The fly-leaf is inscribed Psalterium Grecum Gregorii. At first sight this looks like an attribution to Pope Gregory: but that is not so. An examination of the Kalendar prefixed to the text shows that the book belonged to a monastery where a great deal of honour was paid to St Yvo. That monastery must be Ramsey. We have a Catalogue of the Ramsey library (Chronicon Abbatiae Rameseiensis, Rolls Series), and in it, under the heading of Libri Gregorii Prioris, the entry Psalterium Grecum occurs twice over.

It is worth noticing that this same Abbey was remarkable for the number of Hebrew books it possessed. The Catalogue enumerates nearly all the books of the Old Testament in Hebrew.

The account of their acquisition, given by the faithful Leland (Comm. de scriptt. Britt. s.v. Gregorius Venantodunensis), is interesting. It was in the reign of Edward I., he says, when the Jews were expelled, the synagogues desecrated, and their belongings sold. At Huntingdon and Stamford their books were put up to auction. Gregory of Huntingdon (this same Prior Gregory who owned the Greek Psalter) hurried to the spot and secured all the books he could. He was not the only Ramsey man who profited by the sale. The Abbey Catalogue shows us that a monk, Robert Dodeford, also possessed many Hebrew books. This was in the xiiith century. Early in the xvth Ramsey produced a scholar, Laurence Holbeach, who devoted himself to the study of Prior Gregory's books, and to such good purpose that he was able to compile a Hebrew dictionary. The fate of this work is obscure. It was taken away from Ramsey by the "excessive diligence" of Robert Wakefield, whom Leland briefly, but no doubt adequately, describes as a polypus. As a matter of fact, he was a Cambridge man who became Professor of Hebrew at Oxford, while his younger brother Thomas was the first Hebrew Professor here. Robert seems to have produced a Chaldee Lexicon[1], but not a Hebrew one.

The last I need notice of the St Augustine's books at Corpus Christi are two handsome volumes of the Speculum Historiale of Vincent "of Beauvais" (nos. 13, 14), given to the Abbey in the xivth century by Abbot Thomas (Findon or Poucyn). They are the second and third volumes of a set of four: and they afford a good example of the useful or at least satisfactory results of a systematic exploration of collections of MSS., for I have found the first volume of the same set at St John's College. The fourth has not yet turned up. I will add—for it is germane to the subject—that St John's possesses the second volume of a Josephus of the xiith century, from Christ Church, Canterbury—a splendid book. I find the first volume in the University Library. And again, I find, also at St John's, two MSS. once the property of Peterhouse, but given to their present owners as long ago as the reign of Charles I. They are two copies of Quintilian, and are among the books which I most regretted to find missing from the Peterhouse Library.

The next Library which I shall mention is that of a monastery intimately connected with Christ Church, Canterbury, namely, Dover Priory, which was a cell to that great house. It had a very good collection of books, whereof the catalogue, made at the end of the xivth century, exists in the Bodleian (Bodl. 920) and has been transcribed for me. Six volumes at Corpus Christi are from Dover: the best is a magnificent Bible in two volumes, written in the xiith century (nos. 3, 4). I have also ascertained that the famous Irish Psalter at St John's was once at Dover Priory.

[1] This with other oriental MSS. was (retributively) stolen from his house at Moorgate by Robert Collier, a Carthusian monk. So says Tanner.

Of the five books from Exeter, four were probably among those given by Bishop Leofric to his cathedral in the xith century. Others are at Trinity College, in the University Library, and at the Bodleian. The most famous of them all, which still remains at Exeter, is the collection of Anglo-Saxon poetry, newly edited by Mr Gollancz, and known as the Exeter Book.

Leofric's gifts of books amounted in all to something over fifty volumes. The list of them in Anglo-Saxon was first printed by Wanley (in Hickes's Thesaurus, II. 80). Twelve of these exist, to my knowledge, and there are several others, e.g. the Bede at Corpus Christi (no. 41), which are not to be found in the old list.

A small list of ancient English books occurs in an xith century MS. at Corpus Christi (no. 367) which seems to come from Worcester. I do not find that it has been noticed. It consists of an English Passional, two "Dialogues" (i.e. copies of Gregory's Dialogi) in English, an "oddan boc," a Martyrology, two Psalters, two "Pastorals" (i.e. Gregory, De cura Pastorali), the Rule (of St Benedict), and a Barontus, that is, the Vision of St Barontus of Pistoia, a sixth century book which was very popular in early mediæval times.

Norwich—the Cathedral Priory, at least—contributes probably 18 books. Some of these were gifts of Adam Easton, afterwards Bishop, and Cardinal of St Cecilia. He died in Italy, and sent home five barrels of books which he had collected there. Those which bear his name at Corpus Christi were not of this number: they were written and presented while he was still a monk. Two others of the Norwich books belonged to Simon Bozoun, Prior. Curiously enough, we have a list of his private Library in a MS. in the British Museum. It consisted of 31 volumes, four of which are now known to exist.

The Norwich library was a very large one. Bale possessed the old Register of it, of which Wanley speaks as if he himself had seen it. Unfortunately he was mistaken. He had confused it with the catalogue of Ramsey Abbey. Probably the majority of the extant Norwich books are in the University Library, whither they came by the instrumentality of Dean Gardiner in the sixteenth century, and of Bishop Moore in the eighteenth. At Norwich itself I only know of one.

Of the books from Bury St Edmunds I have treated at length in another place. The other abbeys of eastern England whose libraries are represented at Corpus Christi are Ely, from which came three volumes, Anglesey, which gives one, Coggeshall (four), Crowland (perhaps one), Leiston in Suffolk (two), Peterborough (two), Thetford (one), and Thorney (one, doubtful). St Albans yields five volumes only, and I am surprised that the number is so small. It has not yet appeared what became of the bulk of their books. Their library must have been very large and important, but no catalogue of it survives (Bishop Bale possessed one, but where it is no one knows), and no collection that I have examined contains more than a few volumes from this great abbey. The Peterborough library, of which we have a catalogue, is in even worse case.

Another striking feature in Parker's collection is the rarity of books from the northern abbeys. One volume from Hexham, one from Jervaulx, one from Rievaulx, and one from Salley are all that I can find at present.

The non-monastic or private owners of the MSS. deserve more attention than I can give them here. One book seems to have belonged to Duke Humphrey: I have not identified it among his gifts to Oxford. Another great collector, represented here by one volume—was John Gunthorp, Dean of Wells, who died in 1498. He was one of the early humanists in England, had lived long in Italy, and got together a number of books there. Among them was a large portion of the library of John Free, an English scholar, who used, though wrongly, to be credited with having translated Diodorus Siculus into Latin. The bulk of Gunthorp's library was given to Jesus College, but only one or two of his books are to be found there now, and they are not of Italian origin, nor very interesting. Trinity, St John's and the University Library have all of them volumes once the property of Gunthorp. And his is a name to be much observed when one is engaged in hunting through a collection of MSS., for there is no doubt that the owner of it was an interesting man.

I do not see that any very important general conclusions can be drawn from this investigation of the Corpus Christi MSS. We see that Archbishop Parker did not employ any cut-and-dried plan in forming his collection. As Archbishop he was connected with Canterbury, and from Canterbury he obtained more MSS. than from any other single place. For the rest, he picked up books where he could: and my list shews that almost all of them came from the southern half of England.

I will add, in conclusion, that I can confidently recommend this branch of research to anyone who is prepared to be interested in ancient books; and I should like to accompany my recommendation with the injunction, Always note the opening words of the second leaf[1].

Defectus Librorum, 1508, or Ingram. This is a list of books at Christ Church, Canterbury, which were repaired in 1508. It was made by William Ingram, who was "custos martirii" in 1508 and penitentiary in 1511. It is contained in MS. C. 11 in the Library of the Dean and Chapter of Canterbury, and has been transcribed from the MS. by Mr J. W. Clark, who kindly lent me his transcript. I have collated it with the original MS.

"Edwards" = Edward Edwards's Memoirs of Libraries, London, 2 vols, 1859. He prints the Catalogue of Christ Church, Canterbury, from the xivth cent. MS. Cotton, Galba E. IV., in Vol. I. 122—235.

The catalogue of St Augustine's Abbey is at Trinity College, Dublin. It has been transcribed for me, as also the Catalogue of Dover Priory in MS. Bodl. 920.

THE MANUSCRIPTS IN THE LIBRARY AT LAMBETH PALACE.

In Wood's Athenae Oxonienses (ii. 519) there is a short biography of John Theyer. He was born apparently in 1597 and his career—not an eventful one—does not now concern me particularly. It is the conclusion of Wood's article which supplies me with a text: "His death hapned at Cowper's-hill [near Gloucester] on the 25th of Aug. in sixteen hundred seventy and three, and two days after <he> was buried among his Ancestors in the Church-yard at Brockworth, particularly near to the grave of his grandfather — Theyer, who had married the sister of one Hart the last Prior of Langthony near Glocester. He then left behind him a Library of ancient Manuscripts consisting of the number of about 800, which he himself had for the most part collected. The Foundation of it was laid by his grandfather, who had them from Prior Hart, and he from the Library of Langthony when it was dissolved, besides Household stuff belonging to that Priory. Afterwards Charles Theyer (grandson to our author John Theyer, who in his last will had bequeathed them to him) did offer to sell them to the University of Oxon, but the price being too great, they were sold to Robert Scot, of London, bookseller, who soon after sold them to his Majesty, King Ch. II., to be reposed in his Library at S. James's, he having first, as I have been informed, cull'd them."

Following up the data of this paragraph, we are led in the first place to ask whether any record exists of the contents of the Theyer Collection before its absorption into the Royal Library. We find that in Bernard's Catalogi Manuscriptorum Angliae (1697), ii. pp. 198—203, is a list of 312 MSS. belonging to Charles Theyer, of Gloucestershire: and a comparison of this list with Casley's Catalogue of the Royal MSS. shews that with very few exceptions the books enumerated now form part of the Royal Library. In other words, the collection of Charles Theyer, described by Bernard, is that which Charles II. bought. It is clear that when Bernard's Catalogue was issued the Theyer MSS. must have been for some years at St James's: but I do not find any note of the fact either in Preface or Appendix. It will be further noticed that the number of books (312) differs widely from that specified by Wood (about 800). An explanation of this fact is not immediately forthcoming.

We should expect at this stage of our investigation to find that the Theyer MSS. in the Royal Library were traceable in large part to Lanthony Priory. That, however, is not the case. Of a large number which I have myself examined, not more than two or three are Lanthony books. Worcester and Gloucester have contributed largely to the collection: and this is not surprising when we know that the ancestral abode of the Theyers was in the immediate neighbourhood of Gloucester. But as to Lanthony—clearly there is something more than meets the eye in the history as given by Wood. We can hardly doubt that he is correct in his account of the connexion between the old Theyer and Prior Hart, and the presence of many books from Lanthony on Theyer's shelves. We also see that these books must have been diverted to some other quarter before the purchase of the collection by Charles II. Can we at this time of day ascertain either when the diversion took place, or where the Lanthony books are now? I believe we can.

It would clearly be a very great help if we could arm ourselves with a document showing what books were in the Library whose relics we are pursuing. Such a document is very fortunately accessible. The Harleian MS. 460 contains a catalogue of the Lanthony Library made in 1380, which has been printed by M. H. Omont of the Bibliothèque Nationale[1]. It enumerates some 500 volumes, and at a later stage a word will be said as to its arrangement and contents.

With this catalogue before us we are in a better position to prosecute our researches. Yet I doubt if anything but an accident could conduct us to a successful issue. And such an accident has befallen me. In January, 1899, I was permitted by the kindness of His Grace the Archbishop of Canterbury, seconded by the prompt assistance of Mr Kershaw, the Librarian of Lambeth Palace, to make a systematic examination of the MSS. in the Archiepiscopal Library. It was my hope that among them there would prove to be a large contingent from Canterbury: but the Canterbury books, though interesting, are not numerous. To some extent, however, I was compensated for this disappointment by the discovery that a very large number of the Lambeth MSS. are from Lanthony Priory.

I have mentioned the name of this establishment a good many times without any explanatory note. So I will just remark here that there are three Lanthonies known to fame. The first 'Lanthonia prima' was an Augustinian Priory in Wales, founded in 1108; the second, 'Lanthonia secunda,' a daughter of the first, and by far the more important, founded in 1136 in the outskirts of Gloucester; the third, Lanthony of the present day, an establishment presided over by the Rev. Mr Lyne, purports to have some connexion with the order of St Benedict. Throughout this paper when reference is made simply to Lanthony, the second Lanthony—that at Gloucester—is intended. It is of this house that we possess the Library catalogue; and perhaps it will be well to place here the few words which have to be said about that.

The books are entered in order as they stood on the shelves. There were five cupboards (armarii), containing respectively five, four, five, six, and one, shelves. It is natural to suppose that the fifth press, to which the one shelf belongs, was intended to provide for further acquisitions[1].

The other characteristic of the catalogue is that it is digested into subjects.

The first bookcase contained mainly Bibles, and glosses and commentaries upon various books of the Bible. In the second were the writings of Clement of Lanthony, the most prominent scholar the house produced, and those of Jerome, Ambrose, Gregory, Bede, Isidore, and others. The third began with Augustine, and contained also Hugo of St Victor, and minor theologians, while on its fifth shelf were the books on physic. The fourth was the most varied in contents, comprising Canon Law, Miscellaneous Divinity, History, Grammar, Poetry, Philosophy, and Custumaries[2]. The fifth had dictionaries and a few service-books, together with some miscellaneous volumes of the theological class.

Whether considered in the light of its catalogue, or in that of the extant volumes, this collection as a whole does not rise above mediocrity. The house produced, as I have said, but one writer who attained anything like celebrity, in its Prior Clement. His Harmony of the Gospels is a sufficiently common book. Nine or ten volumes are specially connected with his name in the catalogue. One among these I have identified, and believe to be in his autograph. It is a commentary on the Acts, and is among the few Lanthony books

[1] The number of volumes in the several shelves varies very curiously. The annexed table in which Roman numerals are used to designate the cupboards, and Arabic for the shelves, will shew this:

I 1	10 vols.	II 1	8 vols.	III 1	12 vols.	IV 1	20 vols.	V 1	21 vols.

[2] Namely, the Custumaries of St Victor's, Cluny, the Chartreuse, Merton, and an old one of Lanthony itself.

in the British Museum (Royal 2.D.V). Otherwise, the catalogue contains very few entries that excite curiosity. The MSS. themselves are for the most part good normal twelfth century books. There is seldom anything earlier. A Psalter with English glosses (no. 427) is almost the only one I can point to which is older than the monastery itself.

As I have said, the number of Lambeth MSS. which I assign to Lanthony is very large—well over a hundred. The question will inevitably occur to my readers—on what grounds is each individual book identified? In a large number of cases we have the definite inscription, liber Lanthonie or the like to guide us. Where this is absent I have very often been led to the mark by the occurrence of a certain handwriting on the fly-leaves. It is a hand of the xvth century, which has furnished a great many of the books with tables of contents. Sometimes I have found it coupled with a Lanthony inscription, sometimes alone. In either case the provenance is certain. Then there is the name of a certain Canon Morgan, of Carmarthen, who may possibly be the writer of the tables of contents aforesaid: this, again, may occur either in conjunction with the other indications, or apart from them. Lastly, there are cases in which the contents of a volume, and its presence side by side with a number of books which are certainly from Lanthony, enable me with fair certainty to identify it with some entry in the catalogue. Doubtful items of course there are in my list: but I think it will be found that the evidence is fairly given in most instances.

I will now treat shortly of the Lambeth MSS. as a collection, and try to bring out the chief points of interest in their history. The manuscript library at Lambeth consists of somewhat over 1200 volumes, which are divided into several distinct collections. First, there are the Codices Lambethani, numbering nearly 600, collected mostly by Archbishop Bancroft (d. 1610). Then come Wharton's papers, the collections of Sir George Carew (chiefly Irish), of Archbishop Tenison, of Bishop Gibson: next the Miscellanei, and last the MSS. of Archbishop Manners-Sutton. It is only with the first block, the Codices Lambethani, that I am concerned now. The later collections are for the most part papers, of great interest, but of rather recent date.

It is well known that during the Protectorate the Lambeth books were made over to the University of Cambridge, and remained there until the Restoration. In Mr Bradshaw's Collected Papers a detailed account of the transaction may be readily found. Among the MSS. in the University Library there still remain several catalogues of the printed books and MSS. received by the University from Lambeth: and a very slight inspection of these serves to show that the Lanthony books already formed part of the Archbishop's Library. Of the book-buying archbishops before the Civil War we know that it was Bancroft who was the principal contributor to the Lambeth Library. His successor, Abbot, though he did add to the collection, did not, so far as I can discover, achieve much in the way of acquiring MSS. We must suppose provisionally, I think, assuming that Wood's story of Prior Hart of Lanthony is true, that Archbishop Bancroft bought from the elder Theyer a large number of MSS. including the greater part of the books which had belonged to Prior Hart; and we must suppose that Wood was mistaken in thinking that the Theyer MSS. passed intact into the possession of John and of Charles Theyer.

That is the last, I think, which need be said about Lanthony for some time. The most interesting of the Lambeth MSS. come from other sources, at which we will glance briefly.

Canterbury naturally claims the first place in our list: its contribution is interesting if not large. The Gospel-book of MacDurnan, that famous specimen of Irish art, was given to Christ Church by King Æthelstan. How it came to Lambeth is not known: but it has a binding on it, and red chalk marks therein, which shew beyond question that it was once the property of Archbishop Parker. Sixteen other Lambeth MSS. are from Christ Church. Taking them roughly in order as they stand on the shelves, we note a late but very important obituary, of which Wharton made large use in his Anglia Sacra: an early copy of Anselm's Letters; a volume of Richard, Abbot of Préaux, upon Genesis, whereof the second volume is at Trinity College, Cambridge; the Canterbury Letters, edited in the Rolls Series by the Bishop of Oxford; and a fine Psalter which belonged to John Holyngborne. He was a monk of the Priory late in the XVth century, and seems to have been active either in collecting old books, or at least in writing his name in books which already belonged to his monastery. I have met his name rather frequently. The well-known pictured Apocalypse of the XIIIth century (no. 209) is regarded by the authorities of the Palæographical Society as being a production of Canterbury artists. It contains the arms and effigy of a Lady de Quincey.

From St Augustine's Abbey we have eleven volumes. The oldest—of the eighth or ninth century—contains our only copy of a short tract by Victorinus, De fabrica mundi. In another are some palimpsest leaves of an early Kalendar. A third is a chronicle which is attributed in the Abbey Catalogue to Sprot or Sport.

Bury St Edmund's has six volumes to its credit. Five of them were unknown to me when I wrote my Essay on its Library: which Essay begins, I am glad to say, to need a supplement. The additions here are of considerable interest. A copy of the Arithmetic and Music of Boethius was once the property of Dr John Dee. I dare not now embark upon a disquisition I should much enjoy concerning that unlucky scholar's MSS., the sources whence he obtained them, and their present resting places. Many years ago Mr J. O. Halliwell printed the list of his MSS. for the Camden Society; and of late it has become possible for me to detect and locate a very fair number of his most interesting possessions in this department. He drew largely, I may say, from St Augustine's, Canterbury, through the medium, I suspect, of John Twine; and a great many of his books are, with Brian Twyne's library, now at Corpus Christi College, Oxford.

There is further an early MS. of Alcuin's Letters from Bury, at Lambeth, as early, perhaps, as any that exists. It is bound up with the Collations of Cassianus, and has been so bound since the early part of the fifteenth century at least. There is a title-page in the volume describing both books, and this description is couched in words which recur in the Catalogus scriptorum of John Boston, of Bury. Moreover, it is in the handwriting which I have always suspected to be the autograph of that remarkable bibliographer. Lastly, I will mention a Bible, rather a good one, of the ordinary thirteenth century type, but made interesting by a long note in sixteenth century English. In this the pedigree of the book is traced from the year 1384 to a date very near that of its absorption into the Lambeth Library.

Durham Priory sends a small but very noteworthy set of books. This foundation has certainly preserved more of its original library in situ than any other in the country: but still the number of Durham MSS. which I have encountered in various English libraries is growing to a remarkable figure. The items at Lambeth include first a sumptuous copy of the Historia Aurea of John of Tynemouth, and second a tenth century copy of Ennodius in Carolingian minuscules, which once belonged to John Foxe, the martyrologist.

If adequate materials for the investigation could be found, the question of the history and contents of the Library of Ely Priory would be a very appropriate and interesting subject for some members of this society to take up. As yet, I have hit upon no trace of a catalogue, nor seen any document which gives the least idea of the importance or extent of the collection. Two clues there are to the identification of Ely books, which I believe to be unfailing. One is the presence in the margin of this sign ✝II; the other, the occurrence of the name of Robert Stewarde, which is usually accompanied by a sketch of the Stuart arms. This Robert was the last Prior of Ely, and was fond of writing his name in books. So was Augustine Styward, a relation of Robert's, who was Mayor of Norwich. I have set down seven Lambeth books as possibly from Ely: but in the case of some I waver between Ely and Norwich.

One of the better known Lambeth MSS. is a volume which contains three distinct parts. First a late xvth century paper copy of Roger Bacon's Opus Tertium—very likely from Oxford —used by Mr J. S. Brewer. Next, a tenth century Aldhelm with one fine Saxon drawing, reproduced as the frontispiece to Todd's Catalogue; and last, a MS. from Lanthony. It is satisfactory to me to be able to point out the provenance of the Aldhelm. On its fly-leaf is the inscription "cxxx. al. ca." Marks like this, consisting of a Roman number, followed by the abbrevations "al. ca." or "al. p.," always mean that the book containing them was once the property of the Abbey of the Holy Cross at Waltham. Another book in this same collection gives proof of this assertion (though the fact is known and has been noted by Macray in his Annals of the Bodleian). It is marked "cxli. al. ca.,' and has, besides, a distich beginning Crux sibi sancta librum de Waltham vendicat istum.

The meaning of the letters "al. ca." and "al. p.," as yet uninterpreted, I take to be "almariolum canonicorum" and "almariolum prioris."

There is another highly interesting composite volume (no. 149), of which the second part comes, I believe, from Lanthony, but the first, a tenth century Bede on the Apocalypse, certainly does not. It has at the end an inscription in fine large capitals (printed by Todd) to the effect that in the year 1018 it was given by the Alderman Æthelward to a Church of St Mary, at a place whose name has been entirely obliterated, partly at least by the use of galls. On the same page and not noted by Todd is another short inscription in green capitals, "In nomine Domini. Amen. Leofricus pater."

Now in 1018 the see of Devon was still at Crediton, and Leofric, a great book-man, as we know, was its bishop: and its church was dedicated to St Mary: and an Expositio Bede super Apocalypsim is in the list of the Latin books which Leofric procured for Exeter. Crediton therefore must be the name that stood in the erasure. Leofric may have scratched it out when he transferred the book to Exeter, and a later attempt to revive it has completed its deletion.

For Exeter MSS. in bulk we have to go to the Bodleian, where, owing to the surprising liberality of an early Chapter, there are over eighty. In them we very soon learn to recognise a hand that writes descriptive titles and the like. It is that of John Grandison, Bishop of Exeter (1327—1369), and no mean scholar, but less known now-a-days for that than for the screen crowded with imagery wherewith he masked the western front of his Cathedral Church. There are traces of his literary activity at Lambeth. In a twelfth century Augustine he writes that he gives it to his Church of Exeter, because he had taken great pains with the correction of it at Paris: and elsewhere in the book is a note written by him when studying at that famous university (in 1314).

Such are some of the more immediately interesting results of my examination of the external history of the Lambeth MSS. Naturally many riddles remain unsolved. I shall hope to learn in the future what library was the home of no. 52, marked "de sexto ordine xlii^us^." I suspect it of having come from one of the great London houses. I should be glad also to throw some light on the great Bible (no. 3, 4) of which a description and some illustrations will be found in Mr Kershaw's interesting volume on the Art Treasures of the Lambeth Library. That the two volumes (which were not originally connected) are of English and not German execution I am well convinced. The beautiful Psalter (no. 233) I believe to be East Anglian; but a study of its heraldry is needed before a verdict can be pronounced. It intimately resembles in certain particulars a MS. acquired not long ago by the Fitzwilliam Museum from the late Mr William Morris.

It seems not inappropriate, in conclusion, to reckon up shortly the services which the occupants of the see of Canterbury have rendered to the world in the preservation of ancient literature. Whether we have any books which St Augustine may confidently be said to have handled is doubtful. Theodore of Tarsus has been persistently credited with the importation of several extant MSS., but one only—the Laudian MS. of the Acts—can be now said even to have been possibly his, or connected with him. From Plegmund (891) we have the blackened fragments of a copy of Gregory's Pastoral Care (Cotton, Tiberius B. xi.). Dunstan, as archbishop, owned no single book that we have now. The one that has the best claim to have been his dates from the time when he was Abbot of Glastonbury. In the Christ Church Catalogue Lanfranc is credited with a Homiliary, a Priscian, and three copies of Paul's Epistles. These I have never seen: but at Trinity College, Cambridge, there is a Corpus Canonum which he brought to England from Bec, and many relics exist, both there and elsewhere, of the school of calligraphy which I believe him to have introduced. To Anselm, perhaps the greatest writer of them all, I can unfortunately assign not one book; but St Thomas à Becket collected a large and valuable library in whose composition I seem to trace the influence of his friend, John of Salisbury. At present I have marked about half-a-dozen extant books as having been his property. Stephen Langton gave six volumes to Christ Church: one remains. Robert Winchelsey about 45: I have identified two. Of the libraries of Mepham, Whittlesea, Courtenay, Chicheley, there are in like manner, inconsiderable remnants. Warham's books are at New College; Cranmer's in many places; Pole's at New College; Parker's at Corpus Christi, Cambridge; Whitgift's (with over 200 MSS.) at Trinity, Cambridge; Bancroft's at Lambeth; Laud's—most numerous of all—in the Bodleian, and at St John's, Oxford. A few waifs have made their way to other places. Juxon and Sheldon were no great collectors: the latter is responsible for a few MSS. at Lambeth. Sancroft's mostly went to Emmanuel College: others are among the Tanner MSS. at the Bodleian. Tenison had a large library: part of his MSS. are at Lambeth, and others which were in the Parish Library of St Martin's in the Fields were dispersed in 1861. The best of these are in the British Museum. Wake's are at Christ Church, Oxford. Secker's—mostly autograph Biblical collections—at Lambeth. There also are the Greek MSS. procured for Manners-Sutton.

The list is an impressive one. In this regard, as in many others, I would say with all due respect that the see of Augustine has a lasting claim on the gratitude of England.

INTRODUCTION.

I.

THE CHRONICLE OF JOHN STONE, MONK OF CHRIST CHURCH, CANTERBURY, 1415—1471.

j. John Stone, the author of the following Chronicle, 'compositor istarum cronicarum,' was a monk of Christ Church, Canterbury, for many years, for he gives the date of his profession as 13 Dec. 1418, and he died (according to the Canterbury obituary, MS. Tho. Cawston Cathedral Library Y. 8. 5.) about the year 1480. He filled several of the offices 'officia' in the monastery; he was refectorarius in 1451, subsacrista and magister ordinis in 1457, tertius prior and officiarius tumbæ in 1461, but he is only again mentioned in 1469, when he was 'in capite chori.' He did not rise to any of the higher offices in the fraternity.

ij. The manuscript here printed is preserved in the library of Corpus Christi college, Cambridge, being no. 417, formerly Q. 8. It is of paper and of octavo size.

iij. The Chronicle of John Stone is chiefly concerned with the deaths of his brethren. Some of these lived to a very great age. Thomas Asshe, who died in 1472, had been 63 years a monk, and so was probably about 80 years old, supposing him to have become a monk at the age of 17 years; others are mentioned who had been monks for 60 and 62 years.

A few notices of the abbats and monks of St Augustine's monastery are also to be found in the Chronicle. The monks of Christ Church are in the Index distinguished by a star prefixed to their names.

iv. Mention is somewhat frequently made of the plague as raging in Canterbury; the worst years were 1420, when four monks died 'ex pestilencia' between 23 July and 22 Sept., and 1470–71, when two monks and the subprior died.

The chronicler mentions the royal visits made to Canterbury 'causa peregrinationis,' describing the manner of the reception of the high personages. Ambassadors from the king of France and the duke of Burgundy frequently passed through Canterbury on their way to London, and are duly noticed. The enthronizations of the new archbishops are somewhat fully described by him.

He has many notices of the battles and political events of the Wars of the Roses. The chronicle ends in 1471, soon after the final downfall of the Lancastrians.

v. John Stone mentions the consecration, on 1 Nov. 1444, by the archbishop of Canterbury assisted by the bishops of London and Ely, of the bishop of Lisieux (Lexoviensis), who was then the pope's collector in England. (This statement is quoted in both editions of Dr Stubbs' Registrum.) But the name of the bishop is not given, and in the Gallia Christiana xj (1759) in the bishopric of Lisieux (p. 761 ff) we find Peter II Cauchon de Sommièvre sitting 1432–42, and Pasquier de Vaux his successor 1443–1447. The latter had been bishop of Évreux, and for his zeal for the English cause was translated to Lisieux, his translation being confirmed by pope Eugenius IV on 24 Jan. 1443, and he took possession of his new see in the month of May following. He assisted at the consecration of the archbishop of Rouen on 20 July 1444, and died 10 July 1447. Hence it is difficult to understand the statement of John Stone.

vj. Although John Stone is described as the author of the Chronicle, the MS. is probably not autograph, as the hand changes at the year 1465. There are also places in the text, where the sense shews that passages more or less extensive must have been omitted by the scribe.

On fo. 12 b Nicholas Younge dies 14 Feb. 142½, and the entry which follows next in the chronicle is that of the death of John Aleyn on 4 Aug. 1425 (Tho. Cawston's MS. at Canterbury), in the Stone MS. there is nothing to shew that any fact belonging to the three intervening years is omitted. There is a similar omission on fo. 20a between the account of the consecration of Thomas Bourchier as bishop of Worcester on 14 May 1435, and that of the death of prior W. Molash on 19 Feb. 143⅞.

A papal bull of the year 1464 is entirely omitted on fo. 72 b, the heading 'Bulla domini pape' alone remaining. There are omissions of some length also on fo. 27a in the account of the ordinations on 20 Apr. 1443, and on fo. 30a in the account of the enthronization of archbishop John Stafford on 22 Sept. of the same year. Other omissions there are on fo. 38 a in the year 1448, and on fo. 43 a in the year 1450.

There are other gaps in the text of the MS., which may be due to the want of knowledge on the part of John Stone, but those mentioned above are probably due to the carelessness of the scribe.

There are many grammatical errors, e.g. wrong cases with prepositions, viridus for viridis, etc., of which some are noted; others are left without comment, the sense being plain. The use of a bar over a final vowel for an m is a probable cause of error, the scribe either putting it where it should be omitted or omitting it where it is needed. Mistakes of the scribe are sometimes corrected in the MS. in red ink or in a pale ink.

vij. The list of officers in the monastic body, as shewn by the Index, being very long, it is curious that there is apparently no trace of any one in special charge of the library, which (as we know from E. Edwards, Memoirs of Libraries, 8°, Lond. 1859, vol. I. pp. 122—235) was a large one. At Barnwell (J. W. Clark) and Winchester (G. W. Kitchin) the person in charge of the library was called precentor and armarius (Edwards j 344 ff). The office of precentor occurs but once in the chronicle, and then without any reference to the care of books. The Christ Church library was in charge of the cantor or precentor (Gasquet, English Bible, 18 20).

Another officer, perhaps indicated by 'cc^a' fo. 76 b, is the circator or circa, whose duty it was to go round the monastery and 'to see whether' the monks 'were behaving in all thing according to rule' (Clark, Barnwell, p. xcix; Reyner, Apost. Bened. p. 11, App. p. 234).

The 'bertonarius' is an officer who is mentioned three times; he is mentioned also in Hist. MSS. Commission Report v 441 ix 107, and in Kitchin, Obed. Rolls, p. 232. From Boucher's Glossary he would seem to have been the officer especially chosen to see after the barton, a farm kept in the hands of the monastery. In Lit. Cantuar. [R. S.] iij 5 the 'granetarius' and 'bertonarius' are spoken of as 'custos granarii et berthonæ' (Index, p. 124).

viij. As mentioned in the Index, the second names of the monks are mostly the names of the places whence they came (Taunton j 72 n). This accounts for the frequent use of the word 'alias' in the lists of monks at the Dissolution given in Dugdale. Thus in Dugd. Mon. iij (St Edm. Bury) p. 170 we find 'Thomas Ryngstede alias dict' Denysse,' and many similar cases.

The Index has been made as exhaustive as possible to supply the place of notes on the localities and personages mentioned in the chronicle. The references are to the folios (a, b) of the MS., which are given in the margins.

Names and notices of places, which do not occur in the Chronicle, are inclosed in square brackets.

A bibliography of works referring to this period, chiefly of the works quoted, has been added.

ix. There are accounts of John Stone and of the writings ascribed to him in Pitseus (1619), Vossius (1651), Oudin (1722), and Tanner (1748), but none in Bale (1559). Oudin, indeed, quotes (iij col. 2669), though with much hesitation, a supposed statement of Bale, that J. Stone went to the council of Basel (1431–48), and that he wrote the Acta of that council; but this statement comes from Bale's article (ij 61, no. XLIII) concerning John Stowe, a Benedictine of Norwich. Oudin seems to have confounded John Stowe with John Stone, although J. Stowe is rightly mentioned as having been at Basel in Simler (1574) and Possevinus (1608) whom Oudin quotes.

Pitseus, again, credits John Stone (p. 657) with having written 'Decreta quædam' and 'Speculativæ sanctorum patrum sententiæ de fide, spe et charitate,' and states that the latter work, beginning 'Tanta dignitas,' is in MS. ('dicuntur haberi') at 'Bene't college,' Cambridge. Oudin from James' or Bernard's Catalogus MSS. Angl. (4°, Oxf. 1600, fo. Oxf. 1697) gives the work as no. 369 of the MSS. of C.C.C.C., which in Nasmith's Catalogue is no. 19.

Now the inscription on the first page of that MS. is: 'Decreta Ivonis de claustro ecclesie Christi Cant.' The 'Decreta Ivonis' is a work of Ivo, bishop of Chartres, and consists of 17 books; but in this MS. by mistake Book IX is numbered Book X, and accordingly the work finishes with the end of Book XVI, miscalled Book XVII. The real Book XVII then follows as a separate work, and consequently in James, whom Bernard copies, the MS. is with a further mistake thus described:

'369. Decreta Ioannis (sic) de claustro ecclesiæ Christi Cantuar.

2. Pars continens speculativas sanctorum patrum sententias de fide, charitate et spe. Pr[incipium] Tanta Dignitas.'

Vossius enters this work under 'John Stone' as extant at C.C.C.C., though without any further reference, mentioning him as the author also of a 'grande opus de obitibus,' the chronicle of the monk of Canterbury. But Oudin, following Vossius, inserts the word 'Stone' in the title of the MS. as given by James and Bernard, so that we there find: 'Decreta Joannis Stoni de claustro ecclesiæ Cantuariensis, cuius pars secunda continet speculativas Sanctorum Patrum Sententias de fide, spe et charitate. Principium, Tanta dignitas etc.,' and to make his notice more complete adds Bernard's number as above.

Tanner (p. 694) accepts Vossius' statement, but says that the above works are in the MS. C.C.C.C. Q. 8, which is Nasmith 417, the volume containing J. Stone's chronicle.

This confusion of J. Stone and bishop Ivo is found also in Woolnoth and Hastings' Canterbury (1816), p. 172.

Oudin notices the Chronicle of John Stone, but does not give any information as to the monk's life from it, so that he probably knew the MS. only from James' or Bernard's Catalogue.

Oudin quotes further from James and Bernard a MS. at Worcester Cathedral (no. 39) entitled: 'Quæstiones magistri Joan. Stone, super libros primum et secundum Sententiarum,' as the production of the monk of Canterbury, but the Rev. J. K. Floyer the cathedral librarian informs me that in the MS., which is of the 14th century, there is nothing to corroborate Oudin's guess.

Tanner mentions a 'Martyrologium vel Obituarium Cantuar.' (MS. Lambeth 20), of which Sancroft says: 'Autor est forsan Joannes Stone monachus Cantuariensis.' This MS. is however of the 16th century (James, Lambeth, p. 13).

In MS. Lambeth 585, one of Henry Wharton's MSS., is: 'Historia brevis sed insignis Johannis Stone monachi Cantuar. de archiepiscopis Cantuar. a S. Augustino ad Reginaldum Polum [ob. 1558] quamdiu Archiepiscopatum singuli tenuerint.....ex Registro eccl. Cant. descripta.' The mention of the Registrum of the Cathedral and of Card. Pole makes the name 'John Stone' to be a mistake, as Stone died a.c. 1480.

II.

The Deans, Priors, and Monks of Christ Church, Canterbury.

j. The Benedictine monastery of Christ Church, Canterbury, originally St Saviour's monastery, to which John Stone belonged in the 15th century, was of very ancient foundation, but (before the Conquest) of uncertain history. (In Tanner's Notitia Monastica [1787] Kent XII will be found a very extensive list of authorities, printed and in MS., concerning this monastery, and in the Historical MSS. Commission Reports a full account of the MSS. in the Ch. Ch. Library.) According to the tradition of the monks, as related to archbishop Ælfric (ASChr. F a. 995, a bilingual chronicle of Canterbury ending by mutilation a. 1056), it was founded by Augustine the apostle of the English [about the year 600], and had subsisted as an abode of monks since then for about 400 years. A letter from pope Bonifatius IV to king Æthelberht I, dated a. 615 (Birch CS 10), but apparently referred to the year 610 by Beda (ii. 4), mentions 'monachi' 'in monasterio in Dorobernensi civitate constituto, quod...Augustinus beatæ memoriæ...Sancti Salvatoris nomini consecravit'; the letter is given by Will. Malm. [Rolls Series] Gesta pontificum c. 30, but is stated by Haddan and Stubbs (Councils and Eccles. Documents iii. 65) to be 'questionable,' and 'of very doubtful genuineness.'

According to Elmham (Hist. mon. S. Aug. Cant. [R. S.] pp. 133–4), monks were introduced into Christ Church in the year 615. In ASChr F a. 995 monks are represented as having continued there till a. 832, when clerics also shared in the services, but these clerics were expelled from the cathedral by archbishop Ælfric (995–1005)[1]. In BCS — KCD 715* a. 1006 is found a reference to the expulsion of the clerics, and the introduction of monks.

Before the Conquest the Society of Christ Church was governed by deans, the archbishop being abbat (BCS 160 161 KCD 86 1083 a.c. 740), acting and signing with the 'hired' (family, convent) of Ch. Ch., as the abbat of St Augustine's did with his 'hired' (BCS 402 KCD 230 a. 832, BCS — KCD 732 1315 a.c. 1020, BCS — KCD 758 a. 1038); the names of some of these deans are given by Wharton (Anglia Sacra i. 135, 769), Dugdale (Mon. [1817]), and other historical writers, from an Obituary of Christ Church, Canterbury. Of these deans, two became archbishops, viz. Ceolnoth, a. 830 (Wharton AS i. 4, 135, Gervase of Canterbury Act. pontif. Cant. [RS]) and Æthelnoth, a. 1020 (Wharton AS i. 135 [Rudb.] 232, W. Malm. [R. S.] Gesta Regum c. 184); dean Æthelwine flourished about a. 850; Godric became dean after a. 1023; of others only the days of their deaths are known. After the Conquest, the last dean Henricus at the command of archbishop Lanfranc took the title of prior, a title which the heads of the monastery retained up to the Dissolution (Wharton AS i. 135 ff.), when the Society was re-founded as the dean and canons of Canterbury.

Two late works viz. the Chronica W. Thorne de rebus

[1] 'Anno M^l. iiij^o canonici seculares expulsi sunt ab ecclesia Trinitatis Cantuarie, et introducti sunt monachi' (Tho. Sprotti Chronica [ed. T. Hearne 8vo. Oxf. 1719], p. 64).

gestis abbatum S. August. Cant. [Twysden] written a.c. 1400, and Elmham's Hist. monasterii S. Augustini Cantuar. [RS Hardwick] written a.c. 1415, give a complete series of the abbats of St Augustine's from its first abbat Peter (Beda j 33); but no similar work exists for the Anglo-Saxon period of Christ Church, not even such a work as the lives of the St Alban's abbats in Wats, or of the Croyland abbats by Ingulf, still less such a one as the Antiquities of Glastonbury abbey by William of Malmesbury in Gale's Scriptores xv. The 'Actus pontificum Cantuar. eccl.' by Gervase of Canterbury beginning a. 1100, gives no information for the days before the Conquest; Godric however is found noted as 'decanus' in 1044 and 1053 in Kemble CD 773, 789, 799, the Christ Church charters themselves speaking of the Society as 'familia (congregatio et familia) ecclesiæ Christi.'

The title of 'præpositus' (or 'propositus') is found in a Kentish charter BCS 321 KCD — (a. 805), where Beornheard bears it; the only other ecclesiastical signatary, except the bishops and abbats, is a certain 'Ceolstan pr̃.' These two, Beornheard præpositus and 'Ceolstan p',' occur in a Christ Church charter BCS 319 KCD 189 of the same year. It may perhaps be presumed, that Beornheard was the head of the Society with the title of præpositus; this title is found also at Worcester as equivalent to prior (BCS 455 490 616 KCD 262–250 279 341*).

Another præpositus, Hæhferth (Heahfrith) occurs in a Ch. Ch. charter of a. 813 BCS 342 KCD 200 (om. præpositus).

In BCS 529 KCD — a.c. 871 (MS. Lambeth 1212), an agreement for the exchange of land between duke Ælfred and the family (higan) of Ch. Ch., we find among the signataries Eadmund and 'eall' higan.' Eadmund may have been the præpositus.

These three persons, Beornheard, Heahfrith, and Eadmund I have ventured to insert in the list of deans.

The title præpositus (as equivalent to prior [Stubbs]) occurs in Mem. St Dunst. [RS Stubbs] p. 141.

In BCS 291 KCD 1019 (HSt iij 512) a. 798 archbishop Æthelheard mentions one Cuba, one of the sapientes of Ch. Ch., as 'primicerius.' This title Earle (Land charters 501) translates 'the Dean.' On his authority therefore Cuba also is inserted among the deans.

We learn from Wharton (AS i. 546), that the title of 'decanus' was used also at Worcester monastery (Kemble CD 586 (Winsige), 797, 807, 912 a.c. 1051 (Æthelwine)), and that other designations for the same officer occurred there, as præpositus (see above), primus (KCD 517, 634), and prior (Thorpe p. 445, and in documents after 1066).

Decani are found also at the following churches:

New Minster (Hyde Abbey) Winchester: BCS — KCD 922 (LVH p. 96 n) a.c. 1060. LVH pp. 26, 31, 32 [Ælfric, Leofwine, Wihtsige, Ælfweard].

Old Minster Winchester: BCS — KCD 922 a.c. 1060 [Godwine].

Reculver: BCS — KCD 754* a.c. 1030 [Guic heard].

Glastonbury: FlW a. 981 [Wulfstan].

St Edmundsbury: BCS — KCD 759 — Thorpe pp. 567, 571 [Leofstan].

In BCS — KCD 792 (Abingdon) two præpositi are mentioned, Ælfwig and Cyneweard; but as they are placed among the ministri, they may be laymen.

The heads of Christ Church, Canterbury have been given in two groups, the first consisting of those whose dates are somewhat known, the second consisting of those of whom only the month and the day, but not the year, of death are found.

The last in Wharton's list is Mauricius, bearing an unlikely A.S. name; this dean is accepted by Wharton on the authority of the Obituary MS. Lambeth 20; but in MS. Cott. Nero C. 9 (Dart App. p. xl) he is styled 'diaconus'; he was probably of later date than the Conquest.

ij. The series of the priors from a. 1066 to a. 1540 follows; besides the references to the accounts of them in Wharton (AS i. 136 ff.), references to other historical works are added. Of these priors several are mentioned in John Stone's chronicle.

iij. The members of Christ Church Canterbury may be divided into three categories:

a. the members (seculars and monks) from the foundation to the Conquest in a. 1066,

b. the monks from the Conquest to the Exile of a. 1207,

c. the monks from the Exile of a. 1207 to the Dissolution in a. 1540.

a. Monks of A.S. times are mentioned indeed in many documents printed by Birch, not always also by Kemble, as: BCS 10 KCD — (a. 615), BCS 215 KCD — (a. 774), BCS 345 KCD — (a. 814), BCS 402 KCD 230 (a. 832), BCS 698 KCD — (a. 933), BCS 747 KCD 1130 (a. 940), BCS 1049 KCD 1226 (a. 950), BCS 1185 KCD 519* (a.c. 970), but they are nearly all found in MS. Lambeth 1212, 'an ancient abstract from the registers of Christ church, Canterbury' of a.c. 1290 (Kemble; Earle Land charters p. 407). The originals of these abstracts are not found in the two collections, with the exception of BCS 344 KCD 205 the original of BCS 345 KCD —. The charter mentions the archbishop only, whereas the abstract speaks of the archbishop and the 'monachi ecclesiæ Christi'; from this it would seem, that the mention of the 'monachi' may have been introduced into the abstracts by the author of the compilation.

The charters of later date than a. 990 (and therefore not given by Birch) which mention monks of Ch. Ch., are nearly all accepted by Kemble.

The charters of earlier date than a. 990 speak mostly of 'fratres'; in BCS 402 KCD 230 a. 832 however Werheard presbyter bequeathing lands to Ch. Ch. says: 'reddo ecclesiæ Christi et monachis fratribus meis ibidem Deo servientibus omnes terras infra Canciam et extra, quas hactenus tenui.'

Of the members of the body of pre-Norman times, no list or series exists. Neither can any satisfactory list or series of them be compiled, as, although in the late obituaries of Lambeth (MS. Lamb. 20) and of Dart (= MS. Cott. Nero C. 9) very many Anglo-Saxon names of members of the Society are found, only the day and month (but not the year) of death are given, without any further information concerning them.

There are A.S. charters of Worcester monastery, which have signatures of monks as witnesses, as: BCS — KCD 615 646 649 660 666–671 807; there are many also with names of priests, deacons, and clerics appended to them; there are further charters similar to these latter ones belonging to Winchester, as: BCS 617 622 KCD 1086 1088 (a.c. 900).

With regard to Christ Church, Canterbury we find charters beginning a. 805 witnessed by priests, deacons, and clerics, as: BCS 318 319 332 342 380 381; 405 406 412 417 421 426 (p. 599) 445 516 KCD 191 189 195 200 225 1032; 231 1040 235 238 240 241 256 294. These charters are grouped together by the presence of identical signataries, but no statement occurs in them shewing that the signataries were members of the Christ Church Society. The only charter, where this may seem to have been the case, is BCS 1010 KCD 477 Thorpe p. 509, the recital of a bequest of land in a. 958 subject to certain rents in money and kind to Christ Church; here the witnesses form two groups, the first consisting of archbishop Oda and a series of priests, deacons, and other undescribed personages, the second of Eadhelm abbat of St Augustine's and another similar series; it may be presumed that the first group consisted of members of Christ Church.

Many charters describe the members, as fratres qui serviunt Deo, servi Dei, servi ecclesiæ Christi, seniores ecclesiæ Christi, sapientes ex ecclesia Christi (BCS 291 KCD 1019 a. 798).

In BCS 1212 KCD — a. 968 the hired (family) of Christ Church is a witness, but no names of monks are added.

In the obituaries, monks bearing A.S. names occur frequently, but as such names are also found much later than the Conquest (LVH passim), we cannot say for certain that the bearers of them lived before the Conquest. The names are of the most ordinary (generally late) types, as:

Ælfric	Æthelwine	Leofwine
Ælfstan	Beorhthelm	Ordwine
Ælfweard	Beorhtweald	Siric
Ælfwine	Ceolsige	Siward
Æthelheard	Coleman	Wilfrith
Æthelmær	Eadric	Wulfmær
Æthelnoth	Eadwine	Wulfnoth
Æthelred	Færman	Wulfstan
Æthelric	Herlewine	Wulfweard
Æthelstan	Leofhelm	Wulfwine.
Æthelweard	Leofric

It seemed not worth while making a list of such undistinguishable names.

Of definite members of the Society of Christ Church not many are recorded; some of the archbishops, and a few persons mentioned in charters and elsewhere belonged to it.

b. As to the Society between the Conquest and the Exile (1066–1207), consisting of 150 monks (Wharton AS i. 136), very many names of monks occur in Eadmer (1066–1122), Gervase of Canterbury (1174–1199, continued to 1326), Epistolæ Cantuarienses (1187–1199), Literæ Cantuarienses (c. 1297–1536), the Historical MSS. Commission Reports, and other works. These have been placed as far as possible in chronological order.

c. The series of monks from the Exile, 15 July 1207 to the Dissolution in a. 1540 is probably nearly complete. It is compiled from the MS. C.C.C.C. 298 and Thomas Cawston's MS. preserved in the Cathedral Library of Canterbury. The former MS. contains a list of the monks down to a. 1527 with many biographical notices. The latter MS., begun in 1486 for Thomas Cawston a monk of the Cathedral (d. 1504), contains a list of the monks almost identical with that of the Corpus MS. but continued to a. 1534, and also an obituary of Christ Church monks from a. 1286 to a. 1507, which supplies the dates of the deaths of the monks. This obituary mentions the deaths of many monks not found in the two lists, and their names with those of other persons belonging to the same period (1207–1540) who seem to have been monks, have been given, in continuation of those of the monks of 1066–1207.

iv. The ecclesiastical seals of Canterbury are described in vol. i. of Birch's Seals in the British Museum:

1. The seals of the archbishops, pp. 157 ff.

2. The seals of the Cathedral, pp. 190 ff.

The seals of the Cathedral bear the inscriptions SIGILLUM ECCLESIAE CRISTI (a. 1152) or SIGILLUM : ECCLESIE : XRISTI : CANTUARIE : PRIME : SEDIS : BRITANNIE (a. 1175–1540).

3. The seals of the priors, pp. 483 ff.

Seals exist of the following priors:

Roger de le Lee 1239–1244	Rob. Hathbrand 1338–1370
Nicholas Sandwich 1244–1258	John Salisbury 1438–1446
Henry de Eastria 1285–1331	Will. Sellyng 1472–1494.

MS. Cott. Tib. A. 2 (Gospel book) was given to Ch. Ch. Cant. by K. Æthelstan a. c. 940.

The best thanks of the editor are due to His Grace the Archbishop of Canterbury for allowing the MS. Lambeth 20 to be sent to the University Library, and to the Librarian of the Lambeth Library S. W. Kershaw, M.A. for his very kind action herein; to the Dean of Canterbury for allowing the MS. of Tho. Cawston to be deposited in the University Library; and to the society of Corpus Christi college, Cambridge, for allowing their MSS. to be published, and also more especially to Charles W. Moule, M.A., fellow of the college, who with his usual courtesy facilitated the work of transcription and revision.

Thomas Escheford, monk of Ch. Ch. Cant., wrote a 'magnum opus de vita dive virginis Marie in rythmis,' beginning 'Sanctus Epiphanius doctor veritatis.' He is mentioned in Bale's Notebook ed. R. L. Poole and M. Bateson (Anecdota Oxon: 1902) p. 439. He was perhaps the monk of 1417, who died 1452 (pp. 53, 186), though A. Vögtlin, the editor of Epiphanius (Bibl. des litt. Vereins in Stuttgart vol. 180 [1888]), thinks he may be earlier [Miss Bateson].

While the last sheet of this book was in the press, a very valuable work, the 'Inventories of Christchurch Canterbury' (8° Westm. 1902) appeared, edited by J. Wickham Legg, F.S.A. (pp. 195—318) and W. H. St. John Hope, M.A. (pp. 1—194). Mr Hope there expresses a wish (p. 116) that John Stone's 'extremely curious and interesting' chronicle might be 'printed in full'; his wish has already found its fulfilment in this volume.

Mr Hope (p. 2) mentions Robert, a monk of Christchurch, as being consecrated bp Clonfert in a. 1296, and also (p. 336) Walter Coliweston as being a monk of Ch. Ch. before a. 1503; these two names the present editor has not met with elsewhere, and hence they will not be found in the foregoing lists of monks.

The names of persons in the inventory of 1315 (Hope, pp. 50—100) are in this present volume referred to from Dart's Appendix.
